Mass Exodus Off Island

People resigned to six-hour wait at Swartz Bay ferry terminal

At hotels, motels and camp grounds around Vancouver Island, the exodus is on.

Tourists, especially those with cars or campers, are checking out early or cancelling reservations, for fear of being stuck on the Island during a long ferry strike.

A shutdown of B.C. Ferries Friday morning appears inevitable today despite a last-minute appeal from Transport Minister Robert Strachan.

But shortly after noon, it was announced Strachan and Norman Thornber, business agent for the marine branch (unlicensed) of the B.C. Government Employees Union, would meet in Strachan's office at 2 p.m.

The final decision will be made by 2,000 deck, catering and shore workers at terminal meetings before the first sailings in the morning.

"I expect that unless the attitude of the fleet changes drastically between now and Friday morning, there will be a complete withdrawal of services," said Thornber.

Massive line-ups developed this morning as thousands of tourists and others rushed to get off the island.

By late morning, traffic was backed up for six hours at Swartz Bay terminal. On other days this week, the line-up was an hour during the morning.

At Departure Bay near Nanaimo, an eight-hour wait was reported. "Everybody is afraid of being stranded," commented a terminal official.

On the mainland, Tsawwassen terminal said ferries were taking on full loads for the Island but traffic was "very light" compared with normal summer pressure.

At Horseshoe Bay, traffic was "quieter than normal", with any vehicle arriving within half an hour of departure making it on the ferry. Ferries were leaving with full loads.

Traffic waited four hours to get on the Black Ball vessel Coho to Port Angeles but manager Pat Frumento said it is always like this during the summer peak. He said ferry loads to Victoria are full.

Telephone lines were jammed all morning for Canadian Pacific's service to Port Angeles and Seattle and Washington State Ferries service between Anacortes and Sidney.

Tony Housdorff, owner of KOA camp ground on Mt. Newton Crossroad, had 135 camping units filled Wednesday night.

By mid-morning, all but 41 had checked out, virtually all of them because of the impending strike, he said.

"There's 25 other camp grounds in the area and they'll all be in the same situation, I'm sure," said Housedorff. He depends on good business for the last few weeks of August to make a profit at his business.

The Craigflower Motel had a 90 per cent checkout this morning, manager Doris Rasmussen said today. That's three times the normal rate.

As they left they told her, "We were going to stay but now we're scared," she said.

"I'd like to have Barrett in our office right now," said Mrs. Rasmussen.

Cheltenham Court Motel also experienced a morning exodus. More than one-third of the people who had just checked in, intending to stay several days, left early, a spokesman said.

"It's just going to be disastrous for hotels, motels, restaurants," said the manager of the Estrella Motel, who wouldn't give his name.

"The papers had put the fear of God in them," he said of the departing tourists. "It's going to affect thousands and thousands" of people dependent on the tourist trade.

A convention of 1,500 agriculturalists from across Canada was to arrive in the city Sunday, Mrs. Darien Bain, manager of the Windsor Court Motel, said. She's afraid they won't be able to come now.

"It's affected business drastically."

Sandy McEwan, front desk manager at the Empress Hotel, said: "Everybody is trying to get off the Island."

"They seem very worried," said McEwan. The hotel has had between 30 and 40 people checking out because of the ferry situation, plus cancellations.

Strachan sent a telegram to Thornber this morning saying that if all ferry crews, licensed and unlicensed, accept B.C. Ferries earlier offer with no interruption of service, no slowdown or work to rule, he would appoint a "top mediation officer" to make a "complete survey of the ferry situation."

"This man would meet crew representatives and list their grievances and complaints," said the telegram.

"He would also meet ferry management and list their grievances because manage-

A-G's Aide Loses Job

Gilbert Kennedy, B.C.'s deputy attorney-general for the last 16 years, was demoted by attorney-general Alex MacDonald Wednesday in what could be the first of a series of top-level civil service replacements.

Kennedy, 56, "has been offered" the position of associate deputy minister in the A-G's department, in charge of the administration of justice. He is being replaced by David L. Vickers, a Vancouver lawyer.

Speculation is spreading that Kennedy's demotion will start a chain of replacements of deputy ministers. It is expected that some present deputies will be offered lesser positions within their departments.

Names most commonly associated with the possible replacements are: Fraser MacLean in the transport department, John Stokes in forests, Tom Miard in highways, Les Hempsall in trade, Bill Sands in labor, David Borthwick in lands, Bill Smith in municipal affairs, and Valter Raudsepp in water resources.

The Times has learned that Ray Rickinson, deputy minister of human resources, will be replaced at the start of 1974. It is believed his job will be filled by Jim Sadler who is now assistant deputy minister.

Under questioning today, Premier Barrett conceded that the government is reviewing the personnel in all the categories of deputy ministers and associate deputy ministers.

"Now that these jobs have been opened into new categories, naturally we are going to review people in those categories," Barrett said. "That's the whole purpose of it."

Asked if it is the government's intention to bring in entirely new people to fill the top-echelon jobs in each departmental organization, Barrett said: "perhaps, perhaps."

Macdonald today didn't know if Kennedy would accept the new job but said: "I expect he will."

Kennedy was not available for comment.

Macdonald said Vickers, 38-year-old member of the Vancouver law firm of Ladner Downs, will serve as deputy for only two years, after which it is expected he will resume his law practice in Vancouver.

Macdonald said the appointment of Vickers is "a refreshing innovation but in no way a criticism of the dedication and capabilities of the legal officers of the department who have given and are continuing to give excellent service to the people of this province."

Vickers, married with four children, is a graduate of the University of B.C. and Sir George Williams University in Montreal. He is a former president of the Vancouver Bar Association, member of the national council of the Canadian Bar Association and chairman of the Legal Aid Society.

Vickers will receive a salary ranging from $39,000 to $42,000 per year. He will take over early in September.

Two orders-in-council passed by the cabinet June 27 of this year establish new salary levels and classifications for deputy ministers and associate deputies.

The deputy ministers' salaries range from $33,000 per year to $42,000. Associate deputies are to receive from $25,000 to $33,000.

RENT-A-CONCORDE SCHEME IN FRANCE

PARIS (Reuter) — France today annouced a plan that will enable international airlines to rent the Concorde supersonic airliner instead of buying it.

Finance Minister Valery Giscard D'Estaing said the government is setting up financial groupings to buy the Concorde and other French civilian aircraft and then lease them to airlines.

Officials at Aerospatiale, French builders of the Franco-British supersonic plane, welcomed the plan and expressed hope it will overcome Concorde's sales problems.

Under the leasing plan, airlines would be responsible for maintenance and insurance on the aircraft.

Current selling price of the Concorde is about $50 million a plane with spare parts.

Arab Hijacks Jet to Israel

Times News Services

TEL AVIV — A young Arab man hijacked a Middle East Airways flight today and forced it to land at Lod International Airport where specially trained Israeli security guards boarded it, freed the 119 passengers and crew and captured the hijacker without firing a shot, official Israeli sources said.

However, Lebanese sources in New York said it was actually another Israeli attempt to capture Palestinian guerrillas and that there were two "hijackers" who were actually Israeli secret agents. A Beirut airport source said the Israelis took four persons believed to be Palestinian guerrillas off the plane.

Israelis said the Boeing 707, owned by Lebanon, was hijacked over Cyprus on a flight from Libya to Lebanon. A flight of Israeli F-4 Phantom jets escorted the plane to the airport. Israeli troops had ringed the aircraft with armored personnel carriers, fire trucks and ambulances in case of emergency.

The hijacker, about 25 years old and dressed in a green suit, was led away from the red, white and blue Boeing 707 smiling broadly. His intentions remained a mystery. He had made no demands to Israeli authorities. No shots were fired during the rescue attempt, a military spokesman said, and no one was hurt.

There were unconfirmed reports he had requested political asylum.

In a related development, Israel warned the world today that despite condemnation from the United Nations Security Council, it will not let the rules of international law stand in the way of its hunt for Palestinian guerrilla leaders.

Gumboot Walkout Continues

VANCOUVER (CP) — Longshoremen remained off the job today despite an injunction instructing the longshoremen's union to order its members back to work.

Earlier in the day, Mr. Justice J. S. Atkins of the British Columbia Supreme Court issued the injunction against the union after a dispute over five pairs of gumboots shut down three-quarters of Vancouver's port activity Wednesday.

The dispute first arose in June when five longshoremen reported for work at the White Pass and Yukon dock to find they were to shovel salt, without having been given a protective-clothing notification.

This notification, which for salt means the wearing of gumboots, is supposed to be given in advance.

The five men refused to work, and White Pass demanded that they be punished. A mediator's ruling was interpreted differently by the two sides, and then the longshoremen's union claimed the five should be paid for the shift they didn't work.

The dispute blew up again Wednesday and shut down much of the waterfront when White Pass refused to accept any of the five when their names were put forward for work. Other longshoremen refused to work for White Pass, and the employers' association then stopped hiring altogether.

The sudden shutdown halted bulk exports of grain, coal, sulphur and potash.

Simple Truth Unshaken —Nixon

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon Wednesday night told the American people that two million words of Senate testimony have left unshaken the "simple truth" that he had no advance knowledge of the Watergate break-in and no part in its cover-up.

But he reiterated his refusal to turn over to Senate investigators or the Watergate prosecutors the tapes he says would exonerate him, arguing that any such disclosure would "cripple all future presidents" by exposing their private conversations to public scrutiny.

In a 30-minute radio-television address and an accompanying formal statement, the embattled chief executive acknowledged responsibility for "serious abuses" of both political ethics and national security procedures by some of his former White House and campaign aides.

But he said "the time has come to turn Watergate over to the courts," while he and the members of Congress "get on with the urgent business of our nation."

In a direct appeal to the voters — who last November gave him an historic election mandate but now tell pollsters they have lost confidence in his conduct in office — Nixon said:

"I ask for your help to insure that those who would exploit Watergate in order to keep us from doing what we were elected to do will not succeed."

Niether in the television talk, from his desk in the Oval Office of the White House, nor in the largely over-lapping formal statement that accompanied it did the president offer significant new details of his role in the Watergate case.

"The facts are complicated," he said, "and the evidence conflicting. It would not be right for me to try to sort out the evidence, to rebut specific witnesses, or to pronounce my own judgments about their credibility. That is for the committee and the courts."

Rather than attempting to rebut "the various charges in detail," Nixon underscored the contention of his previous major statements—on April 30 and May 22—that "I had no prior knowledge of the Watergate operation; (and) I neither took part in nor knew about any of the subsequent cover-up activities. . . ."

With the latest Gallup Poll showing that approval of his presidency has dropped to 31 per cent and that almost three-fourths of his constituents believe he knew either of the break-in plans or of the cover-up, Nixon bore down hard on his own defence.

"In all the millions of words of testimony" to the Senate investigating committee, he said, "there is not the slightest suggestion that I had any knowledge of the planning for the Watergate break-in."

PAPER LACK HITS WEEKEND

MONTREAL (CP) — Weekend Magazine, a color supplement carried in the Victoria Times and 20 other Canadian Newspapers, will not publish its Sept. 1 edition because of a shortage of newsprint due to strikes, William Goodson, president of Montreal Standard Publishing Co., said Wednesday.

Both the magazine's newsprint suppliers — Canadian International Paper (CIP) and Price Co. Ltd. — have been hit by strikes over new contracts.

Goodson said he did not know whether the magazine would be forced to cancel another issue in the future.

With the magazine's newsprint stockpile, the choice had to be made between cancelling either the Sept. 1 or the Sept. 8 edition, he said.

In Toronto, E. J. Mannion, president of Southstar Publishers Ltd., said Canadian Magazine, the weekend supplement carried by 14 newspapers also will not publish its Sept. 1 edition because of the newsprint problem.

FIRST SNOW REACHES B.C.

FORT ST. JOHN (CP) — It wasn't enough for skiers to unpack their gear but the snow — the first in months — fell in northwestern areas of Alberta and in B.C. Wednesday night.

About one-half inch of rain and snow fell on Fort St. John, and a forestry station in the foothills 40 miles south of the town reported one inch of snow.

The weather office said the snowfall was caused by cool Arctic air moving south, bringing showers and high temperatures in the 50s.

Kingsview Move Stuns All Parties

By PAT DUFOUR

NORTH COWICHAN — Action taken by North Cowichan council Wednesday stunned both a developer who plans a massive housing development for Mount Tzouhalem at Maple Bay and residents opposed to his plan.

In a surprise move before a council chamber filled with about 70 people, council unanimously passed two readings of amendments of a land-use contract between the municipality and Kingsview Properties Ltd.

The move was the latest in one of the biggest controversies faced by North Cowichan which began when council declared the 505 acres a development area in December, preparing the way for a land-use contract with Kingsview.

Four public hearings have been held, each attended by irate Maple Bay Road residents, opposed to the housing development which they say will overload services and ruin the rural atmosphere of the area.

The opposing residents had the original land-use contract quashed in court earlier this year.

Wednesday, council gave a first reading to a land-use contract discussed at the public hearings and followed by giving two readings to the amendments.

Neither the developer nor the opposition had had an opportunity to see the amendments until immediately before the meeting. Both sides seemed stunned at the move.

Interviewed after the meeting, Mayor Gerry Smith said the amendments gave council more rigid control over the development and would cost the developer more money.

"It's going to cost the developer a lot of money," he said, "it's up to him whether he accepts it or not."

Contacted today, Kingsview president George Wilkinson said it will be at least a week before a decision to go ahead can be made.

"We are going to have to look at the changes of the economics of the development," he said. "They're now allowing us only single-family dwellings — no townhouses or apartments. They've also tacked on another 10 acres of parks and playgrounds. That's a fairly hefty chunk of money. They've also reduced the commercial area and moved it back where the townhouses were to be."

There were hisses and

Cash Payments to Agnew Detailed to Prosecutors

New York Times

WASHINGTON — Attorney-General Elliot L. Richardson met with Vice-President Spiro T. Agnew early this month and outlined the substance of the evidence gathered by federal prosecutors in Baltimore against the vice-president.

Today, a special grand jury in Baltimore resumed its investigations of an alleged bribery and kickback scheme involving the vice-president.

Two of Agnew's long-time associates were believed to be among the first witnesses called to testify. (See also Page 11.)

The New York Times has learned that the key elements of the case presented by Richardson to Agnew were the following:

● More than 20 Maryland businessmen told prosecutors that they had given cash payments to Agnew associates in return for state and government contracts and that they believed some of the money was being funnelled to Agnew.

● At least three of the Agnew associates the businessmen named were said to have told the prosecutors that they turned over some of the payments to Agnew. The three were Lester Matz and Jerome B. Wolff, engineering consultants in Baltimore, and Allen I. Green, once one of Agnew's closest friends.

● Matz told prosecutors that he made one payment of $2,500 to Agnew in the summer of 1971 in return for his help in getting someone a job in the general services administration.

Matz said that he turned over the money in the presence of J. Walter Jones, a Maryland banker and political supporter of Agnew. But Jones has publicly denied participating in kickbacks or witnessing any being made.

Some time before they began to talk to the prosecutors, Matz and Wolff went to George White, Agnew's long-time personal attorney, and told him that if the federal investigation in Baltimore was not stopped it was going to involve the vice-president because they would tell what they knew, the sources said.

While none of the former aides who said that they had separately given kickbacks to Agnew have been corroborated by other witnesses, sources said that the cumulative evidence collected thus far was enough for the prosecutors to seek an indictment against Agnew and that they intended to do so.

The three former Agnew associates have emphasized that they made cash payments to Agnew both when he was governor of Maryland and when he was vice-president.

Green has told the prosecutors that he gave kickbacks to Agnew some five times a year until 1969 and slightly less often since he became vice-president.

Green was said to be the strongest witness against Agnew thus far because of his reputation and the fact that he was one of Agnew's closest personal friends.

Green is president of Green Associates, Inc., an engineering concern based in Towson, Md. One of the concern's seven vice-presidents is Richard Beall, a brother of George Beall, the U.S. attorney for Maryland who is heading the investigation.

Matz is a partner in the Baltimore engineering consultants firm of Matz, Childs and Associates, and Wolff is president of Greiner Environmental Systems Inc., a subsidiary of the J. E. Greiner Co., another engineering consultants firm. Both the Matz and the Wolff concerns won numerous contracts with the state while Agnew was governor.

"As for the cover-up," he added, "my statement has been challenged by only one of the 35 witnesses who appeared a witness who offered no evidence beyond his own impressions, and whose testimony has been contradicted by every other witness in a position to know the facts."

That witness, of course, was former White House counsel John Dean. As he has done in every previous statement, Nixon contended that it was Dean, more than any other official, who kept assuring him for months that there was no White House involvement in the case.

Among things Nixon did not answer in his speech and statement were:

—Why he didn't demand an accounting by his campaign director, John Mitchell, who swore he would have told the president about a cover-up if asked.

—Why he didn't directly ask Dean whether anybody was involved in the wiretapping besides the seven men who were indicted and later convicted.

—Why he didn't follow up on a telephoned warning from former acting FBI Director Patrick Gray, less than three weeks after the break-in, that men on the White House staff were trying to confuse the investigation.

—Why he didn't ask the FBI or the justice department to investigate "new information" which he says first came to him from Dean last March 31. This included allegations that other campaign officials were involved in the wiretapping, that money was paid to the silent defendants, that clemency was discussed with one of them and that another was attempting to blackmail the White House.

How he first learned of the 1972 break-in at the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist, and why he delayed for more than a monh btefore allowing the information to go to the judge in the Pentagon papers case.

Nixon has promised to hold a news conference sometime before Labor Day. Some of the unanswered questions may be addressed then.

A sampling of congressmen from both parties and all political persuasions evoked a mixed reaction about the substance of Nixon's reply to charges he was involved in the Watergate cover-up.

Nearly all, however, thought that the president was likely to receive a positive response from the American people for his appeal to "turn Watergate over to the courts" and "get on with the urgent business of the nation."

Rep. Thaddeus Dulski (Dem. -N.Y.) said the speech wasn't substantially different from the President's May 22 statement.

"But who am I to take the word of John Dean against that of the president?" Dulski said.

Republicans also reacted positively. Some, including GOP national chairman George Bush, said the president had done better than they expected.

"It's beyond what many of us thought he could do, given the facts," Bush said. "I think it's going to be an important plus in terms of putting Watergate in perspective. He was frank, direct—and he admitted some things had gone wrong. He put his finger on the pulse of the public when he said that the country wants to get on."

Senator Daniel Inouye Dem. Hawaii, a member of the Senate committee, said he was disappointed with the statement and bothered by the president's remarks that the committee is absorbed in implicating Nixon.

"I believe the contrary to be true," Inouye said. "never have we as a panel or as individuals ever suggested that the president was aware of or involved in the break-in."

Senator Barry Goldwater Rep. Ariz. commented that the president's address "did not add anything to his other speeches that would tend to divert suspicion from him." But Goldwater said he supports the president in his appeal for Americans to recognize the dangers to the country and the world.

George Bush, chairman of the Republican national committee, called the speech "credible and very reasonable." He said he is convinced the American people want the country freed "from the Watergate obsession."

General Strike Urged in Chile

SANTIAGO (Reuter) — A long strike by truck owners which has brought critical shortages to Chile threatened today to spread to other sectors of the economy. (See also Page 5.)

The president of the Road Transport Confederation, grouping proprietors and owner-drivers, urged all business and professional people Wednesday night to support the strike, now in its 22nd day.

First signs of support were already perceptible Wednesday as private bus owners pulled their vehicles off the roads, leaving only small fleets of state-owned trucks and buses operating.

The transport confederation president, Juan Jara, said in a radio broadcast that his colleagues are prepared to burn their vehicles rather than return to work.

He spoke after a military commissioner appointed by President Salvador Allende gave the strikers in Santiago province, where about one-third of the population lives, a final ultimatum to return to work or face seizure of their vehicles.

Jara, in reply, warned that if the government uses force, the consequences could be "death, destruction and injuries."

A group of government congressmen are preparing a draft bill urging the expulsion of the U.S. ambassador, Nathaniel Davis, who they accuse of aiding the strikers and right-wing guerrillas.

The congressmen alleged that Davis was directing operations by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency with the objective of overthrowing Allende and his 33-month-old coalition government.

Wet Blanket Settles Here

Don't blame today's wet weather on the weatherman, but on a trough of cold air that has settled over the Victoria area.

That trough is probably going to be around for several days, the Victoria weather office said today, bringing us generally cool weather with intermittent rain and showers.

Today's rain was the first measurable amount for 40 days.

Friday should be a little warmer than today, with highs in the mid 60s, but Saturday will be cooler again.

Summer isn't entirely over, says the weather office. A high pressure area will probably bring more nice weather to the city early next week.

laughter from the audience Wednesday when Smith announced that the amendments called for a payment of $200 from the developer for every developed lot. This money, he said, would be spent on the improvement of Maple Bay Road.

A municipal official, however, said later that this was incorrect. He said the money would be put in a general improvement fund and used for any roadwork necessitated by the development.

Ian Stewart, counsel for the opposing residents, told the meeting his clients should have an equal opportunity to be heard. Some of the residents expressed concern that they have an opportunity to air their views on the amended land-use contract.

Stewart said later: "We had two or three legal points on our side before today. We haven't lost them."

The mayor cofirmed that no time limit has been set for Kingsview's acceptance of the new deal. He also said that no public hearing would be held on the amendments.

"The amendments were made up two months ago," he said. "Our solicitor has given us to understand that it is perfectly legal under the Municipal Act not to have a public hearing."

He added, "They (the residents) still have recourse to the municipal affairs department 30 days after the final reading."

"The amendments will give us tight control," he said. "It's better to have orderly development. These people only represent a minority. If it was put to the taxpayers it (the land-use contract) would be passed."

He pointed out some of the controls added in the amendments:

—Reduction of units from 1,350 to 1,250.

—Minimum size of lots upped to 7,200 square feet.

—Reduction of the commercial area from 10 acres to a small general store and gas station, set back in the development area.

Unions Urged to Halt Rail Strike for Talks

EXODUS IN RAIN: Tourists wait on Swartz Bay dock in rain this morning as threat of ferry strike by Friday created six-hour backlog of travellers hoping to avoid being marooned on the Island.

Times News Srevices

MONTREAL — Judge Alan B. Gold has asked union leaders of Canada's 56,000 non-operating railway employees to halt their rotating strikes as part of a new proposal placed before union representatives today.

Richard Smith, chief union negotiator, said following a meeting with Judge Gold today the mediator's suggestion was being considered by leaders of the non-ops, involved in rotating strikes against 11 railways since July 26.

He did not reveal the rest of Judge Gold's proposal.

Smith said negotiators would consider the plan and contact Judge Gold later today.

In his first statement on how the week-old mediation talks are going, Smith said the union has not reduced its wage demands.

"We haven't changed any figures," he said, "we're hanging in there."

Smith also said the judge has not given the unions any indication he has been able to move the railways from their wage positions.

The unions are seeking wage increases of 10.8 per cent hourly in each year of a two-year contract.

The railways are offering an increase of seven per cent hourly in the first year, with an additional 6.5 per cent in the second year.

The railways faced more labor problems meanwhile, as the negotiating committee for 20,000 shopcraft workers rejected a conciliation board report handed down Tuesday.

The shopcraft workers can legally strike in a week's time, but a union official said walkouts will "quite likely" begin within three weeks, after membership authorization is obtained.

The regional non-ops strikes, the most recent of which began at midnight Wednesday in Ontario east of Thunder Bay, now cover all Eastern Canada.

Until 4 p.m. local times today, when non-ops in the Atlantic provinces are scheduled to return to work, there will be no rail movement east of the Lakehead.

Workers in Quebec are not scheduled to return until 3 a.m. PDT Friday.

Both union and railway sources made it clear Wednesday that the talks under the supervision of Judge Alan B. Gold, federally appointed mediator, were closer to the breaking point.

Sources on both sides had said, before the announcement that talks would continue today, they expected the talks to collapse Wednesday night.

"I guess the judge had one last ace to play and they promised to take a look at it," a union source said after the announcement.

Richard Smith, chief negotiator for the Associated Non-Operating Railway Unions, said after Wednesday's second set of talks the situation is near a turning point.

One informed railway source said that today "is a very important day and it may be the end of responses to the judge's proposal."

ment have some complaints too.

"He would then travel the ferries, observe the situation and investigate the complaints, talk to the personnel involved and report to both crew representatives and management.

"This report would then become the basis for continuing discussions between crew representatives and management in an effort to clear up all problem areas and thus create a different and improved working relationship between management and crew personnel."

Strachan told reporters he spoke to Thornber for an hour Wednesday "trying to find other avenues and after a lot of consideration last night, I decided to send this telegram to him this morning."

Thornber replied that "right now the reaction is negative. There are too many things in there that are unanswered. We will reply later on."

He said Strachan's telegram will be referred to the terminal meetings Friday morning "and the answer will come from the meetings."

Issues in dispute between the two sides include wages, wage adjustments and payment for work on statutory holidays.

Crews have been offered a minimum 10 per cent raise on present wages which range from $450 a month for a foot passenger ticket agent (in his first six months of work) to $770 a month for a chief cook, with tradesmen earing $910. Tradesmen rates are based on those at Burrard shipyard, less 6 per cent.

A shutdown of B.C. Ferries would leave Vancouver Island with only two ferry connections to the Canadian mainland—Canadian Pacific's Princess of Vancouver service between Nanaimo and Vancouver and Carrier Princess service between Swartz Bay and Vancouver. Both runs are subject to interruption by continuing regional rotating strikes by railway workers.

Service would also continue by Black Ball to Port Angeles, by Canadian Pacific to Port Angeles and to Seattle and by Washington State Ferries between Sidney and Anacortes.

The Associated Chambers of Commerce of Vancouver Island sent a telegram today to Premier Barrett urging the government "to take necessary steps to immediately and permanently prevent" a strike.

The group said a strike will impose hardship, serious economic repercusions and "irrecoverable loss of faith with tourists and industries associated therewith."

Meanwhile, the mood of drivers and their passengers at Swartz Bay is changing — from early good humor to being hopping mad.

Some treated the six-hour wait lightly, armed with coffee thermoses and (in some cases stronger spirits).

Others did not.

The "Congestion Ahead Sign" was barely visible from the end of the line-up and harrassed Tswwassen-bound passengers laughed sarcastically at its message.

"They say there's congestion ahead," said one Vancouver resident. "What do you call this?"

"It's assinine, I've got to wait six hours. The government should have stepped in and stopped this situation.

"I feel like turning around and going back to Victoria, but I can't even do that," he said ruefully looking back at a car line that had grown a

"Yulch," was the way Mrs. Paul Villett, of Edmonton, described the situation.

"We found out about the strike yesterday on the radio, we made a few calls and they said this would be the best route.

"It can't be," she said adding the family wanted to stay a little longer, but had packed their gear in the trailer at 4 a.m., arrived at the terminal at 6 a.m. and were still waiting at 9:30 a.m.

The Villetts had resigned themselves to the wait for three and a half hours. They were next in line for the ferry.

The Przednowek family from Winnipeg, however, was mad.

"I think it's terrible and we probably won't be back," said Mrs. Ed Przendnowek after a similar wait.

"When we got here this morning at 6, we were at the end of a massive line-up. We would have stayed longer — it's beautiful country — but . . ."

Ferry personnel guiding the un-ending traffic lines remained cool, however.

Overnight crews reported line-ups had started about 4 a.m., and assistant terminal manager Allan Cunningham said "I don't see how there can be that many more tourists left after the line-ups last night and this morning."

There was an extra sailing at 11 last night.

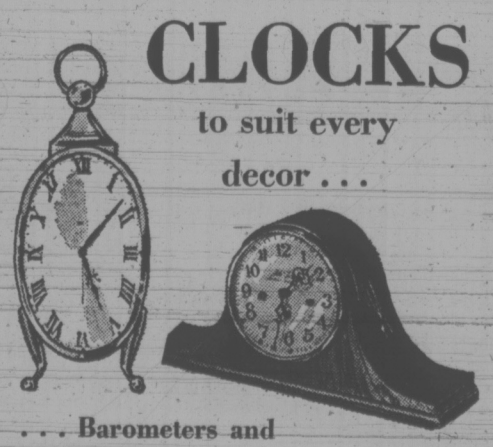

"We must be clearing the Island."

Tower operator Ralph Blaine said "we'll just have to play it by ear even if it takes until 5 a.m. to get these people off."

Camper and trailers he said, were causing "a bit of a problem because they take up the space of two cars."

Five extra employees were called in to direct the traffic miles away from the terminal.

But . . .

President Nixon made no charges of "damned lies" against his accusers, as his vice president, Mr. Agnew, did earlier this week, but his emphatic comments in yesterday's broadcast restated his innocence in all aspects of Watergate. Even more clearly than before, he laid the blame on his legal adviser, Mr. Dean, and his other un-named aides for withholding from him any facts about White House complicity in the Watergate break-in and subsequent cover-up. In the face of such denials from his own assistants, Mr. Nixon said he disbelieved press reports. "I did not believe there was a cover-up because I did not believe there was anything to cover up."

But in the flow of denials, explanations and personal versions, Mr. Nixon did not deal with particulars. The net result of his address is that the public is really no wiser than it was before about all the Watergate questions that are engrossing the country. Those who supported the President before will no doubt continue to do so; those who did not believe him before will not likely believe him now.

But quite apart from whether Mr. Nixon was personally involved in Watergate or not — and he said that Mr. Dean was the only witness, among 35, to implicate him — the fact that comes through most clearly from the speech is that the president still does not appear to grasp the essential nature of the moral maelstrom into which U.S. politics, and the presidency, have been plunged.

He spoke of "false charges," "a few overzealous persons," "the extremes of Watergate," "abuses," and so on, and hoped that "when Watergate is forgotten" the good things of the era would be remembered. The whole scandal was reduced, by implication, to a minor election incident which should not stand in the way of the country's engrossment in larger affairs.

The fact is, the inner government of the greatest nation in the world had fallen into the hands of men with no apparent concept of morality, men who believed that the ends justified the means, and who did not close their eyes to wrongdoing so much as fail utterly to recognize it with their eyes wide open.

That seems to be Mr. Nixon's predicament still. "Settling up" the Watergate case will not dispose of the essential problem which has been exposed, if the state of mind and morals which permitted Watergate — and the Pentagon Cambodia lies, and other incredible events in recent history — continues unrecognized and unreformed.

Mr. Nixon pledged to be "more vigilant" in the future, to see that "such abuses" do not take place. But vigilance seems hardly enough. Without a whole new philosophy, it could mean merely the blind vigilantly leading the blind.

". . . oh, Harold . . . it's just gorgeous . . . even the myriad floating bits of plastic have a shimmering serenity on a night like this . . .!"

What About Those Cars?

City council's acceptance in principle of the long debated Government, View and Broad Street mall concepts will enhance the aesthetic character of downtown Victoria and perhaps cause some monumental traffic snarls. As currently envisioned, View Street will be closed to automobile traffic between Government and Douglas; Broad will be similarily closed between View and Yates; a semi-mall will be created on Government between Humboldt and Pandora by widening the sidewalks and routing traffic one-way north in two lanes, and Wharf Street will become a one-way thoroughfare going south.

It's a bold concept that may result in a proliferation of sidewalk cafes, fountains, flowerbeds and the languorous feelings engendered by any oasis in the centre of a concrete and brick city. But Victoria is not Europe with squares and alleyways which were laid out in the Middle Ages. As City Traffic Engineer David Campbell has pointed out, the plan will remove half the main travel lanes in the downtown area. It also cuts out 120 parking stalls with one stroke. And inevitably Douglas and Blanshard will bear a heavier traffic load because of the one-way thoroughfares on Government and Wharf. While relocation of the Black Ball ferry terminal and provision of more off-street parking could alleviate the situation, downtown traffic will surely become heavier and more frustrated.

Where will it go? Shoppers, government personnel and downtown workers will have to employ the wiles of rats in a maze to get to work. It is almost as if the city has said to itself, downtown will eventually become glutted with automobiles anyway, so let's bring the problem to a head and we'll work from there.

At this point, at least, it seems that Victoria's carefully laid aesthetic plans are dependent to a degree on new rapid transit systems from the periphery of the city. It's a good theory, although the city may be jumping the gun. Governments have a way of promising new concepts in transportation that seem to run down before they get off paper.

Aside from these nagging worries about the reality of the automobiles, the plan will go a long way to improving the dull commercial facade of the downtown's core. Still, the city should carefully monitor traffic patterns produced by the changes and have a few alternative tricks up its sleeve to cope with the ubiquitous automobile.

Good Recommendation

Unlike some other municipalities, Victoria's planning department has taken a sensible stance on the problem of condominium conversions. Methods, rather than the basic merits of conversions, should be uppermost in council's mind when deciding on a specific conversion, according to the planning department.

In some instances the planning department has suggested more than the four months notice required under the Landlord and Tenant Act. This is more logical than the action taken by Vancouver's city council which simply put its head in the sand, placing a one-year moratorium on conversions.

Conversions will always pose problems, especially in Victoria where large numbers of elderly people live. The extra months to look for new accommodation would be especially helpful to this segment of the population and council would be wise to adopt the planning commission's recommendation.

ROB BULL

An Eastern Oil Problem Too

CHARLOTTETOWN — The premiers of Canada's five eastern provinces meet today with the governors of United States' six New England states to discuss common problems of energy and transportation.

As last week's inter-provincial premiers conference showed, there are different approaches towards energy by western Canada, the two provinces of central Canada, and the Atlantic region.

The country's easternmost provinces had their case well stated for them recently by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, a regional body similar in local function to the Economic Council of Canada on the national level.

"Virtually all the demands for petroleum products west of the Ottawa Valley," the council statement said, "are supplied from secure Canadian sources.

Dependent on Tankers

"The Atlantic Provinces are, by contrast, completely dependent on tanker-borne imports subject to the risk of an extended restriction in production by a key member of the Organization of Petroleum Producing countries or to the ever-present risk of a fourth outbreak of Arab-Israeli hostilities.

"The security of oil supplies is of particular concern to the Atlantic provinces as they are more dependent than the rest of the country on the use of imported oil and oil-fired generating plants."

At the present time, eastern Canada has the equivalent of only about 40 days oil requirements on hand.

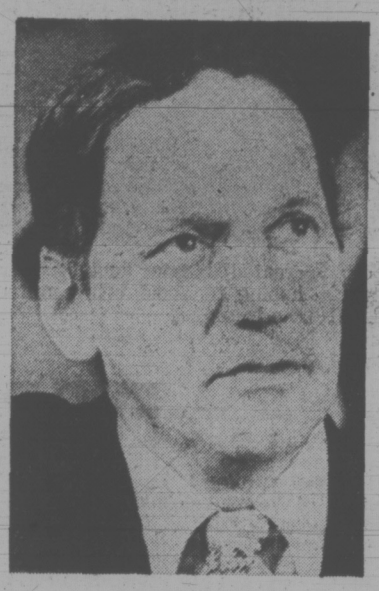

The council says the recent federal energy study is heavily preoccupied with the needs and resources of western and central Canada at the expense of the Atlantic region.

Premier Gerald Regan of Nova Scotia said some time ago that the federal government must distinguish between the export of domestic oil, Canadian oil supplies and the refining of Middle-East oil for United States consumption.

Any export restrictions, he said, are "extremely detrimental to the eastern provinces' development."

With the advent of the supertankers, the construction of oil refineries at such east-coast deep-water ports as Come-By-Chance, Nfld., Canso, N.S., and Cacouna, Que. becomes a viable enterprise.

U.S. ports are too shallow to accomodate such vessels whose operations are most profitable when there is little time spent between the points where they load and unload their cargo.

PREMIER REGAN
. . . against restrictions

If Middle East oil is processed in Canadian refineries and forwarded to U.S. points in smaller tankers Canada gains on the transaction.

The council statement also criticizes federal energy policy for failing to examine the possibility of making use, in Central Canada, of cheaper Middle-East oil.

"Yet, given present export opportunities for Canadian western oil, and providing that security of supply in emergency conditions can be obtained, there seems to be little reason not to make greater use of cheaper imported crude.

"Atlantic coast refineries could with advantage be used to refine middle-East oil for central Canada and New England."

The council calls for the construction of a pipeline or tanker link between the east coast and central Canada to move refined products west and, in an emergency, to move western oil east.

The council also suggests that eastern and western Canada make a common cause for the construction of a trans-Canada oil link including a pipeline to Montreal from the Maritimes. This would be cheaper than tankers if the volume of petroleum exceeds 10 million tons per year, the statement says.

Such a link "would permit a higher volume of Canadian petroleum exports to the United States without jeopardizing Canadian supplies or reserves."

Guaranteed Market

The present national oil policy is largely based on a desire to guarantee a market in Ontario for western oil, "but this reason is no longer applicable since the United States will now take all the western oil it can get."

There are other east-coast sources of power. Newfoundland plans to further develop the Churchill Falls in Labrador. There are off-shore oil possibilities, nuclear energy proposals in New Brunswick and even the potential development of the Bay of Fundy tides.

All these could help supply a base for industrial development in Eastern Canada and earn hard cash in sales to power-hungry New England.

Maritimers look forward to the meeting between their premiers and the New England governors to establish the basis of a profitable co-operation in energy matters. They deserve the support of other Canadians.

CHARLES BARTLETT

A Tale of Three Trips

WASHINGTON — Three postponed trips tell the Cambodian story better than battlefield reports and political speculation from Phnom Penh.

President Lon Nol is not coming immediately to the United States although a trip for health reasons was described as imminent only a week ago. American advisers felt then that his departure would transfer the reins of Cambodian control into more capable hands. Now they feel he is needed in Phnom Penh as a magnet for the diminished loyalty of the troops.

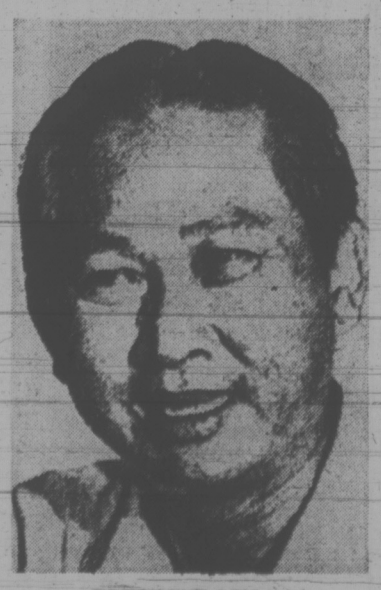

Sen. Mike Mansfield, Prince Sihanouk's best American friend, has put off his trip to China. He never admitted he was going to see Sihanouk, but it appears the Prince is refusing to parley, even with his old friend. Sihanouk is not in a mood to make any deals until the Khmer Rouge have had a chance to make the most of what openings they will have after the bombing stops on Aug. 15.

Poised for a Visit

Henry Kissinger, poised for a China trip, seems to be awaiting a signal from his Chinese friends that he can hope to tie down the Cambodian situation, a loose end which could unravel all his hopes of stability in Indochina. But the Chinese won't lean on Hanoi at this point, so there is not much for Kissinger in Peking.

This was the crisis from which Washington meant to keep its distance, the situation in which aid was to be given with the least possible interference. But the American officials became reformers after their aid was used corruptly and they have been slowly drawn into managerial roles. They serve now as the balancing wire that holds the Phnom Penh government together.

This is why President Nixon warns of the "dangerous potential consequences" of Congress' move to stop the bombing on Aug. 15. The rain of bombs on the mudflats has been meant to substitute for the lack of respect for the Phnom Penh authorities. When the bombs stop, the peasant will be more puzzled than before in his necessity to choose between a government he distrusts and the Communists whom he fears.

PRESIDENT LON NOL
. . . shaky health

But it is not moral or sensible to use bombers with 60,000-ton loads as psychological props. Certainly they were no lasting remedy for the intrinsic weakness of the Lon Nol government, and history is not apt to record that Cambodia was placed in Communist hands by Congress' decision. But it has clearly limited the President's room for manoeuvre in a complex situation.

Settlement demands by the Khmer Rouge have risen with their military prospects, and while they recently seemed ready to settle for 50 per cent of the pie, they may want more than 50 per cent after the bombing stops and Phnom Penh lies open to their approach. Sihanouk is already calling for the complete elimination of the "fascist Khmer republic."

Pyrrhic Victory

But it can add up to a pyrrhic victory for the Prince in that he will be returning to limited power tied by a short string to his least favorite Communists, the ones in Hanoi. To get their backing, he renounced hopes of reclaiming his former dominance. But to exert his political genius in rescuing Cambodia from the Vietnamese yoke, he will need to get back in the saddle.

Cambodia's misfortunes stem from a foolish coup in which the United States had no part. It has left six million people to endure the misery of a civil war in which most of them had no champion. They will be hurt by his alliance with the Communists.

Cambodia is a tragedy on which the United States can ill afford to intrude much further. But Congress, having tied the President's hands, must back him in attempting to insure that the Communists' success in Cambodia does not revive their zeal for aggression elsewhere.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Prices

According to recent press reports our Premier, Mr. Dave Barrett, is advocating a sure-fire method to end the soaring meat prices. Our minister of agriculture, Mr. D. Stupich, has climbed on the same bandwagon.

The cure? It's absurdly simple: don't buy the stuff. You can bet your bottom dollar, if you have one, that neither of these gentlemen has any intention of taking his own advice. It's also a safe bet that they both know the suggested cure simply will not work, conditions being what they are. They know full well that one of the major causes behind the price increases is frantic buying and hoarding by a large segment of the population who can buy regardless of price.

It is very easy for persons who have good incomes to suggest that persons not so well fixed should just not eat meat. Since all food prices are rising continually the suggested cure if carried to its ultimate end would result in starvation for some of the poorer people.

Persons who occupy responsible government positions should occupy themselves with plans to assist, rather than confuse, the persons who are really caught in the price squeeze.

As a start why not draw from the experience gained during the depression years? Food vouchers could be issued to the pensioners. The amount could be $25-$30 per month for each person. These vouchers should not be negotiable by anyone other than the original recipient.

A plan of this nature could be set in motion in a short space of time. It could also be discontinued when and if prices returned to normal. However costly a plan of this nature would be, it would be infinitely more helpful than suggesting that people just don't eat. — C. McCreath, 6925 Central Saanich Rd.

Squeeze

As a pensioner I agree whole-heartedly with your correspondent Impoverished Widow in her letter "Taking and giving."

However your correspondent has touched on only one phase of greed which permeates society today when she rightly condemns the unions for their exorbitant wage demands which are, of course, immediately passed on by business to the consumer.

I would remind Impoverished Widow of the greed of the developers who operate in our fair city and whose only thought is the "fast buck." I would also add to that list the industrial and mining companies whose profits have never been higher than in the first six months of this year. Of course such profits will immediately cause the unions to raise their sights and we will have further inflation.

With the frightening increase in the cost of living I note that many of the processing food companies have increased their profits. B.C. Packers doubled their profits in the first half of this year. All sectors of society including our professional categories lead the way in increased incomes and in many cases fees are based on what the market will bear.

In spite of the fact that the chartered banks were already making good profits interest rates have been raised and our government in Ottawa does just nothing about the situation and of course the powers of the provincial government are limited in many spheres. Still we elect and re-elect our federal MPs so, in the end, it is our fault. The average voter is ill-informed, selfish and apathetic and until there is a change I can see the country being run in the interests of the powerful rich few without any regard for the interests of the majority. — M. 60 YEARS AGO

From the Times of August 16, 1913

Warrants for the arrests of over 100 men implicated in the disturbance which took place in Nanaimo and Extension have been issued and will be served today. The men will be gathered by the provincial police and will be lodged in jail until their trial. No arrests have been made at Ladysmith or South Wellington but warrants are being prepared for immediate service. Reports received in Nanaimo early this morning are to the effect that burning and looting occurred last night in Chinatown at South Wellington. No one was injured and the property damage was small.

U.S. Behind The Troubles Of Chile

To even the most casual scanner of newspaper headlines, it should be clear by now that Chile, long a stronghold of democratic traditions in Latin America, is in deep trouble: Minor military revolts, strikes, bouts and street fighting, food shortages, inflation and assassination.

Some of this turbulence has been inevitable ever since Salvador Allende, 64, took office in late 1970 as the western hemisphere's first elected Marxist president (with 36 per cent of the popular vote). Disappointing Chile's ultra-leftists, he has sought to develop his version of social justice without repression, without liquidating the basic freedoms and his political foes.

Lacks Majority

But Allende lacks a majority in the Chilean congress; his foes are skilled at blocking presidential legislation (just as his supporters frustrated his predecessor, Christian Democrat Eduardo Frei, in the 1960s). His own coalition, ranging from Socialist moderates to old-line Communists to Maoists, is torn by doctrinal disputes over how to handle income redistribution, land reform, "worker participation" in management and foreign investment. Skilled managers and technicians have left the country; some of Allende's well-intentioned reforms were poorly planned and badly executed.

In brief, Allende's regime would have met difficulties, by this time, under any circumstances. But U.S. policy has aggravated the country's plight. The extra economic burden imposed by Washington — through a cutoff of grants and loans since 1970 — has helped push Chile closer to civil war, giving the population the increasing polarized choice of a military dictatorship or a dictatorship of the far left.

Washington's action has a narrow official rationale: Allende has nationalized U.S. companies, notably Kennecott Copper and Anaconda, with out "adequate compensation."

As President Nixon laid it out in a January, 1972, policy statement on expropriation of U.S. business abroad, beyond cutting off bilateral "economic benefits," the United States would oppose loans "under consideration in multilateral development banks." — i.e., Chile can't get much help anywhere in the west. John Petty, assistant secretary of the Treasury and a key figure in U.S.-Chile policy, put it this way: "I think you'll find the U.S. less prepared to turn the other cheek. It's a new ball game, with new rules."

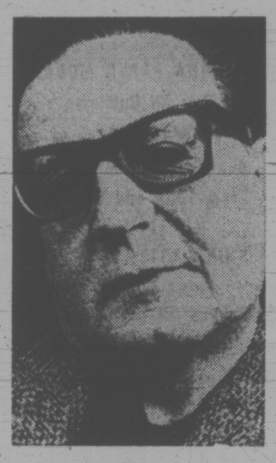

Who stands to win the "new ball game" remains unclear. The old ball game was, in Chilean eyes, rigged in favor of foreign (U.S.) capital.

Keep in mind that Chile has a population of nine million, not much larger than that of New York City, with a far smaller middle class than New York's. Thus, foreign capital can quickly have a significant influence in domestic affairs.

When foreign industry was given major incentives and tax breaks to enter Chile in the 1960s, it did so smoothly and efficiently. By 1968, according to one government study quoted in the left-wing magazine Punto Final, foreign interests, mainly American, controlled 60 per cent of Chile's chemical and metal product industries, almost 50 per cent of the shoe production, and almost 100 per cent of such key industries as petroleum distribution and rubber and tobacco production.

The net return on invested capital doubled during that decade, increasing to 23 per cent in 1960 (almost double that of U.S. firms in other Latin American countries.)

Although foreign control of key industries was galling to Chileans, what mattered most was that this control was not used to increase production or bring needed dollars into the country. The profits were not plowed back into the domestic economy but were sent home to stockholders.

ALLENDE

Until Allende took office, foreign corporations in Chile had the unlimited right to exchange local currency for dollars. This is called convertibility, and is the key to foreign investment abroad. A Chilean businessman who earned escudos, the Chilean currency, could not go to the bank and exchange them for dollars. An American businessman could.

Yet these dollars are crucial to Chile's success, for only with dollars can Chile buy needed imports of food or equipment or replacement parts. Chile's dollar reserves are low, and it can get dollars only through export sales or by borrowing from international sources. But until recently the same industries — primarily copper — which exported products sold for dollars were controlled by U.S. corporations which were remitting those dollars to the United States at a rapid rate.

In effect, the government was driven to borrowing dollars abroad for economic development while foreign corporations were taking dollars out of the country. In 1969, for instance, $137 million flowed into Chile from foreign (mostly U.S.) investment, while the outflow in profits and debt payments totaled $235 million.

There were other effects of U.S. investment. One was the concentration of industry into fewer and fewer hands, since foreign investment tended to go into the largest Chilean firms. By the late 1960s the owners of small and medium-sized businesses in Chile were beginning to complain about this increasing concentration at home.

Throughout the '60s the Chilean left, led by Allende, was calling for restrictions on foreign capital. It demanded that the government set a fixed rate of return on invested U.S. capital, or a limit on the amount that could be remitted, or a multiple exchange rate for dollars leaving Chile.

Though they fell well short of nationalization, such conditions were viewed by many American corporation managers as tantamount to confiscation of property; most foreign loans and grants had been given to Chile on the implicit condition that no such restrictions would be imposed.

When Allende took office in 1970, almost every Chilean political faction supported the nationalization of certain sectors of the economy owned by U.S. interests. Most important, this meant the two major copper companies, Anaconda and Kennecott.

Both far left and far right believed that Frei's 1967 agreement with the copper companies — giving the government 51 per cent control of Kennecott's Chilean operations and 25 per cent of Anaconda's in exchange for lowered taxes and promises of increased production — had proven a windfall to the companies.

Allende has charged that Kennecott, without investing any significant new capital in Chile or significantly raising producton levels as promised, raised its return on invested capital to 113 per cent in 1968 and 205 per cent in 1969.

The agreement also saddled Chile with increased debts: under its terms the companies borrowed heavily from the U.S. Export-Import Bank and other sources in order to boost production capacity; the government was committed to sharing in the companies' debt.

Excess Profits

When Allende nationalized the copper companies in 1971 with congress's approval, he agreed to pay compensation but cited the poor condition of the mines and the excess profits the companies had made during the 1960s as reasons for cutting the total $700 million compensation sought by Kennecott and Anaconda. Washington said Allende's position violated international law. Chile has since proposed using a 1914 agreement with the United States, which provides for mediation of outstanding disputes; discussions with Washington are continuing on the proposal.

When the Nixon administration moved to cut off credits to Chile, it was easy for people familiar with Chile's situation to foresee the results. Thanks to columnist Jack Anderson, we have at least a glimpse into policymaking inputs.

In October, 1971, ITT vice president and Washington lobbyist William Merriam wrote to Peter G. Peterson, then assistant to the president for international economic policy, proposing an "economic squeeze" on Chile through the denial of international credit, a ban on imports of copper and on vital exports to Chile so that sufficient "economic chaos" would develop to convince the armed forces to "step in and restore order."

Whether this policy suggestion has been implemented in a co-ordinated and conscious manner we may never know. Yet the situation has worked out much as Merriam suggested.

The worsening of the economy has led to the worsening of the social and political situation in Chile. Allende had made it clear, in both his party's platform and in public statements after taking office, that there would be a redistribution of income and privilege. But he also tried to make clear two other things: that the Chilean revolution would not lead to the proletarianization of all classes, as had occurred in Cuba, and that Chile is rich enough in natural resources to raise everyone's standard of living to adequate levels without impoverishing any class.

At first these statements were warmly supported by Chile's middle class, and even skilled sections of the working class who fancied themselves middle class someday. But Washington's embargo on aid and credit has made such predictions by Allende impossible to fulfill (the far left in Chile said they would be impossible to fulfill in any case).

The first group to rebel, not surprisingly, were well-paid bureaucrats, businessmen, large landowners and diplomats. Many of the richest and most powerful had taken their money out of Chile and fled — even before Allende was elected. Among other things, the redistribution of wealth during Allende's first year in office led to increased demand for scarce beef on the part of the low-income classes, which reduced the beef available to the well-to-do.

The opposition was quick to capitalize on this discontent and organize the well-publicized housewives' "march of the empty pots" in December, 1971.

By autumn of 1972 broader segments of the middle class were beginning to feel the acute shortage of goods and services. In September a poll published in the anti-Allende magazine Ercilla showed that 75 per cent of the lower-income households polled stated that essential products had become easier to find, while 77 per cent of middle-income and 99 per cent of high-income households were finding them less accessible.

By October all of Chile was convulsed in a general strike, led by middle-income people. The catalyst was a work stoppage by independent truck owners in southern Chile who were upset over the shortage of replacement parts and tires.

The nationwide sympathy walkout showed the polarization of Chile along class lines. Local chambers of commerce and associations of manufacturers would call strikes, and their workers would come to work anyway. Truck owners would strike, and the government would establish supply and distribution centers, directly linking the farms in the south with the poor neighborhoods in Santiago. The professionals went on strike; the paraprofessionals did not.

The crisis only subsided when Allende invited military leaders to join his cabinet, thereby forcing the opposition to strike directly against the military, something it was not willing to do at that time.

Polarized

This was the shaky state of affairs leading up to the attempted military coup at the end of June. There has been recurrent fighting on the streets of Santiago. Chile has not experienced such violence since 1891.

The country is polarized, not only into voting groups, but into opposing armed camps, willing to strike, to fight and to march with weapons outside the parliament and the voting booths.

Allende has asked congress to impose a state of seige, which would give him almost dictatorial powers. The opposition refused to permit this. The tension continues.

In the early 1960s there was a widely stated belief on the part of U.S. policymakers that leftist takeovers in Latin America meant the elimination of democracy, perversion of the constitution and an end to basic freedoms. In Chile this did not occur when Allend's Marxists took office.

Nevertheless, the United States has used its power to cause Chile — under Allende — economic anguish.

The new Nixon aid doctrine has made it eminently clear that what matters now is what priority a third world country puts on U.S. investment, and what compensation it is willing to pay to American corporations — even corporations which, as in the case of ITT in Chile, have admitted trying to intervene in domestic affairs to bring down the elected government.

By this "business first" approach the United States has helped force Chile into a political polarization its people have traditionally sought to avoid.

Besides strapping the economy, the U.S. sanctions have encouraged plotting by right-wingers, confident that they have Washington's tacit support for a violent coup. The middle class, hard hit both by Allende's measures and by economic setbacks, is increasingly impoverished and increasingly ready for anti-Allende violence. The left, urged on by its ultras, may feel impelled to discard civil liberties in order to survive and pursue its social goals.

If political moderation finally dies in Chile, the United States can share the blame.

Guardians at the Gate

By CHRISTOPHER DAFOE, The Sun

The hordes of weary journalists staggering back from the Commonwealth Conference in Ottawa are muttering about the overwhelming security arrangements laid on by the federal government, apparently to protect the visiting prime ministers from prying eyes and to assure that bare minimum of actual news coverage took place.

It has even been hinted that the bodyguards outnumbered the politicians.

We live in stirring times. Back in the dark ages, when I was a reporter, I used to walk right up to Lester Pearson, John Diefenbaker and other big-wigs and brazenly ask them questions about freight rates, the national debt and the next election. Nowadays, if a reporter tried that sort of thing he might have his arm broken — or worse.

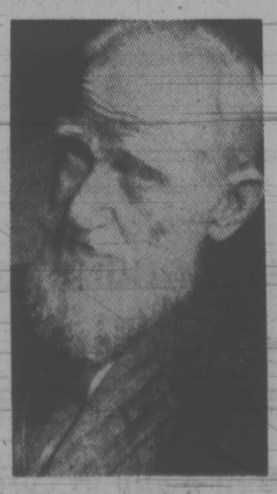

These days any politician above the rank of parliamentary secretary seems to be accorded the status formerly reserved for kings, queens and popes. "Look darlings, it's Mr. Trudeau! Take off your hats and look grateful!"

I first became aware of this dramatic innovation in June when I attempted to get into the Shaw Theatre at Niagara-on-the-Lake for a performance of You Never Can Tell.

When I arrived the theatre was like an armed camp. Most of the audience was milling about on the drive. The theatre doors were guarded by burly men in suits that didn't quite fit.

My first bid to enter the theatre was repulsed by a mean-looking giant in uniform who threw himself into my path, grabbing at my lapels. I retreated to the pavement and joined the overawed multitude to await the promised arrival of the Trudeaus and the Prime Minister of India. The crowd was in a festive mood. We were all impressed. Even Hitler wasn't better guarded.

A small, bespectacled gentleman in white dinner jacket turned to his large wife. "Did you bring the bomb, Ethel?" he cried in a squeaky voice. The guardians at the door flexed their mighty muscles and looked dangerous.

SHAW
. . . spinning?

A faint cheer rose up as the official party arrived and trooped into the theatre and then those holding tickets were reluctantly allowed to creep to their seats. The bodyguards (I was later told that there were more than 80 of them) were augmented by the arrival of a troop of infantry with bare bayonets and the play began.

Beefy men stood posed at the four corners of the auditorium, thinking, perhaps, of President Lincoln's unfortunate visit to Ford's Theatre to see Our American Cousin. The fact that we were about to see You Never Can Tell had, somehow, a significance never foreseen by CBS.

The performance passed without incident. Ethel forgot to throw her bomb. The actors stuck more or less to the script. The curtain fell and the critics, as is their custom, leapt to their feet and charged up the aisle in the direction of the press room. Deadlines, after all, were looming.

The first wave of critics was met in the lobby by a frantic gaggle of security men. I found myself pinned to a half-open door as the mob of newsmen behind surged up the aisle in the general direction of their waiting typewriters.

Our way was blocked by a hulking thug who assumed the stance of Horatius at the bridge. An eye-ball to eye-ball confrontation ensued.

Disaster was averted by the arrival of a PR person who flashed a badge and guided the first wave of critics into the safety of the public relations department. We settled down uneasily at our typewriters. I'd forgotten my program. My attempt to return to the lobby was cut short when a massive hand fell on my shoulder.

I stopped dead in my tracks and watched while three vast, well-fed strongmen terrorized a theatre employee who had attempted to pass into the lobby ahead of me. These enormous louts made it clear, in a kind of mock-jocular fashion, that if either of us took another step we were dead men.

Behind me a theatre employee gasped, "Clive Barnes didn't make it! He's out there and they won't let him through!" The illustrious critic of the New York Times had apparently run into a solid wall of bayonets and was now lurking nervously beyond the ring of cold steel. If only the actors could have been there!

The troops, quite clearly, were out for blood. A lone woman stumbled into the open space between the soldiers and the government goon squad. "March right over her!" shouted one of the soldiers as they trooped out to save their PM from God knows what.

The Trudeaus and Mrs. Gandhi were wafted away in their flying wedge. Ethel put her bomb back in her handbag and Shaw, I trust, stopped spinning in his grave.

Doria Badly 'Busted Up'

FAIRHAVEN, Mass. (UPI) — Divers who entered the purser's office area of the sunken liner Andrea Doria found the vessel "really busted up" from its collision with a Swedish ship 17 years ago, a spokesman said Wednesday.

Jay Fiondella, a spokesman for the divers, said they found "everything was so banged up they decided to wait until daylight (today) to see which direction to go in."

The expedition, made up largely of current or former navy divers, is seeking to salvage an estimated $2 million in cash and other valuables believed aboard the Doria.

The vessell sank in 1956 after a collision with the Swedish ship Stockholm. In all, 51 persons drowned in the accident. The ship now lies 250 feet below the surface of the Atlantic and 45 miles off Nantucket Island.

All past attempts to salvage valuables from the wreck have failed.

The divers, who managed to enter the vessel by cutting open two steel doors, are working out of an underwater habitat at the ocean bottom, where two of the men — Christopher Delucchi and Donald Rodocker, both of San Diego — have been living for more than a week. A third man, photographer Bob Hollis, joined them last weekend in an attempt to speed up the salvage operation.

Fiondella said the divers entered the area of the purser's office but apparently did not actually go into the office. Most of the money and valuables are believed located there. "It's like a shopping mall area," Fiondella said.

He said "really bad seas" as high as 15 feet slowed work Wednesday and made it extremely difficult to use lights inside the old ship.

There had been reports that the expedition might have to be disbanded later this week because many crewman aboard the support ship Narragansett have used up their navy leave time. Fiondella, however, said they since have received an extended leave until Aug. 25.

Farm Battle Fatality

BAKERSFIELD, Calif. (UPI)— The battle between the Teamsters and United Farm Workers Union to organize California's field hands claimed its first life Wednesday.

Nagi Baifulluh, 24, a UFW picket from Keene, Calif., died in a Bakersfield hospital of head injuries received during an altercation with police Tuesday outside a tavern in nearby Lamont.

Violence also flared on the picket lines Wednesday when a farm hand opened fire on UFW pickets, including the son of union leader Cesar Chavez, at a ranch near Earlimart in Tulare County.

No one was hit when a non-striking employee of George Lucas' ranch fired several shots at the UFW supporters following a rock throwing fight between pickets and workers.

Chavez' son, Fernando, 24, an intern on the staff of state assemblyman Richard Valatorre, dived behind a car when the shooting broke out. Chavez said he had joined the pickets as a legislative observer.

Tulare County sheriff's deputies arrested Luis Rivera, 29, of Earlimart in connection with the shooting.

Bairfulluh died following an operation for injuries received the previous night after a brawl in a Lamont Tavern.

Kern County sheriff's office said Baifulluh was fleeing from deputy Gilbert Cooper when he fell and struck his head.

NO GRUMBLING FROM SKYLAB

HOUSTON (UPI)—Skylab 2 astronauts no longer are grumbling about not having enough work to do and Commander Alan Bean predicts the rest of the flight will go off without a hitch.

The crew's flight surgeon has given his approval to a full 59-day mission.

Officials added 11 man hours a day to the crew's work day after Bean said none of the astronauts was sleeping the allotted eight hours a night and didn't need as much time scheduled for meals and getting ready for bed.

Dr. Paul Buchanan said Wednesday night he has "no misgivings" about extending the flight of Skylab 2 for the full 59 days. The original flight plan at launch called the mission to run at least 28 days and thereafter the ground controllers would make week-by-week extensions of the flight.

Today's schedule called for Bean and colleagues Owen Garriott and Jack Lousma to conduct some more observations of the sun and experiments that will reflect how man lives in the weightlessness of space.

The crew photographed the sun's exploding energy for eight hours Wednesday during a relatively quiet period of solar activity.

Workers Back At Chrysler

DETROIT (AP) — Workers returned to Chrysler's stamping plant today in sufficient numbers to open the plant, a Chrysler spokesman said.

"The plant is operating," said Chrysler spokesman Tom Houston.

There were no pickets but a large number of United Auto Workers members with sergeant-at-arms badges ringed the plant area to help keep order.

Houston described the process as "very orderly."

The plant was closed for 27 hours Tuesday and Wednesday by an unauthorized walkout, which ended Wednesday with the arrest of the leaders of the dissident workers.

This week's action did not achieve any of its intended goals. These included demands for the re-hiring of six workers fired for participation in earlier walkouts, complete amnesty and back pay for all those involved in the stoppage and the dropping of charges against two men arrested Wednesday.

The wildcat strike began Tuesday morning after a scuffle between guards at the plant, where metal is stamped into parts, and the two employees, William Gilbreth and Clayton Smith, both 25.

Gilbreth was fired Monday with five others for taking part in an unauthorized shutdown in July to protest "the poor ventilation, 115-degree heat and just plain unsafe working conditions."

The work stoppage was the third unauthorized strike to hit Chrysler since contract negotiations began more than a month ago.

A Chrysler spokesman said the work stoppage had little effect on total production.

The strike ended with Gilbreth and Smith in handcuffs, charged with assaulting the guards, and with Chrysler refusing to yield to any of the protesters' demands.

NRC Grant To Bamfield

The Bamfield marine biological station has been awarded a $77,000 National Research Council grant.

The grant is one of a total of $1.5 million to universities announced in Ottawa today.

Dr. Norman Wilimovsky, chairman of the station's facilities committee, said today the grant would be spent in three ways:

—Operating costs, including salaries of technicians.

—General station facilities.

—Boat charters.

Wilimovsky, a faculty member at the University of British Columbia, said the bulk of the money for facilities would be spent on improving the station's sea water system.

"No marine biological station can function without an adequate sea water system," he said. "With just a single sea water system any failure could mean that long-term experiments would be ruined.

"The money will be used on such items as an electric generator, a sea water pump, compressors, piping and other equipment."

He added that, in order to upgrade the station's research capability, "cold rooms and more specialized gear" will also be installed.

The largest grant announced by the NRC today was $500,000 over five years, to the University of Sherbrooke.

UBC is to receive $364,000 over three years while Laval University has been granted up to $306,000 for its research.

Five universities take part in the Bamfield operation. They are the University of Victoria, UBC, Simon Fraser University, the University of Alberta at Calgary and the University of Alberta at Edmonton.

Seven Indicted In Muslim Deaths

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Seven Philadelphia men were indicted Wednesday for the murder of seven Hanafi Muslims last January.

Five of the seven victims were children, ranging in age from nine days to 10 years old. Four of the children were drowned in a bathtub at the house donated to the sect by basketball star Kareem Abdul Jabaar, while another child and the two adults were shot to death.

U.S. Attorney Harold H. Titus Jr. said the indictments resulted from an around-the-clock seven day-a-week investigation that began after the Jan. 18 deaths.

Cominco Fine Cancelled

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Workmen's Compensation Board Wednesday has decided to nullify a $25,000 fine it imposed against Cominco Ltd. for unsafe working conditions at the Trail smelter.

A WCB spokesman said Cominco would instead establish a schedule of dates for the upgrading of certain equipment in line with modern standards of industrial hygiene.

The fine was originally threatened by the WCB on July 18, following an earlier inspection of the smelter, and Cominco was given time to present a suitable written submission to show why it should not have to pay.

The WCB investigation was sparked by union complaints of high levels of acid mist, airborne lead concentrations, and poor ventilation.

Test Backs Magruder Story

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Jeb Stuart Magruder was reported Wednesday to have passed a lie detector test supporting his allegation that former attorney general John Mitchell approved the Watergate break-in.

The Washington Star-News, quoting "reliable sources," said Magruder, former deputy director of the Nixon campaign, took the test on orders from federal prosecutors some time between April 14 and May 2.

Magruder has acknowledged that he had lied the first time he appeared before the Watergate grand jury and during the January trial of the seven original Watergate defendants. The Star-News said the results of the lie detector test indicated he was telling the truth when he went to federal prosecutors April 14 and offered to tell all he knew. He testified before the grand jury a third time on May 2.

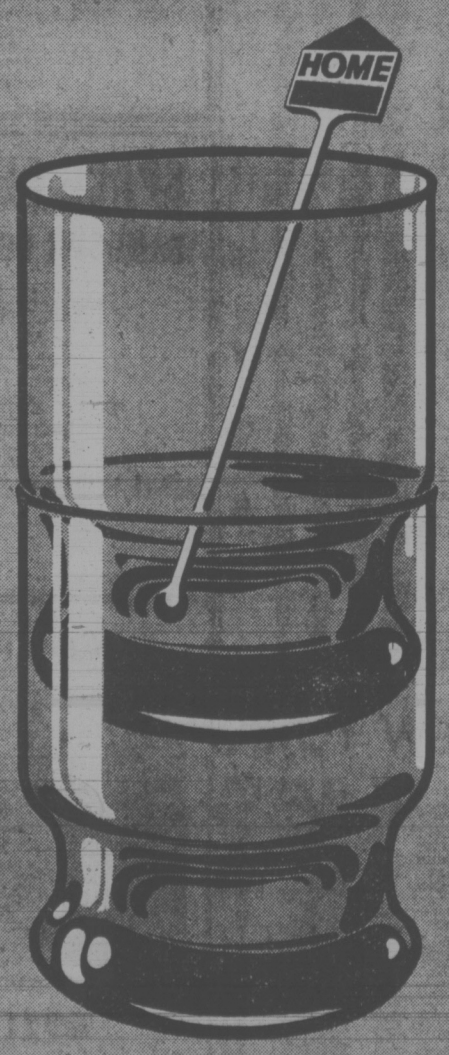

The lie detector test "is considered by the prosecution to lend some credence to Magruder's version" of the Watergate story, the newspaper said.

Magruder told the Senate Watergate committee that Mitchell gave final approval on March 30, 1972, at Key Biscayne, Fla., to Watergate conspirator G. Gordon Liddy's scaled-down plan to eavesdrop on Democratic headquarters at the Watergate complex.

Mitchell later denied this, saying he rejected the plan outright. Another participant in the Key Biscayne meeting, Mitchell aide Frederick Larue, testified that Mitchell said only that the matter did not have to be decided at that time.

VSE Recording Mini-Boom

By AL FORREST
Business Editor

The Vancouver Stock Exchange trading volume has hit 31.8 million shares so far this month, making the first half of August the busiest two weeks of the year.

With 23 trading days this month, a total August volume of 66 million is indicated, which would easily surpass the 58.3 million in January, the previous high point of the year.

Shares are trading at an average daily volume of just under 3 million per day, which rates as a mini-boom, at least compared with the rather limp performance of the market so far this year.

The penny mines continue to dominate the action.

Top trader Wednesday was Green Eagle Mines Ltd. which rose 17 cents to 83 cents on 329,500 shares.

However, the shares were developing a heavy short position at last report, indicating some investors are pessimistic about the long term prospects of the exploration program.

The Vancouver-based company is looking for copper in the Cariboo.

The Vancouver Stock Exchange today reported the short position of the shares had increased 17,500 to 18,500 during a two-week period.

The total is the short position as of Aug. 1, as the task of tabulating and reporting short positions takes two weeks.

In the oils, PRP Explorations was selling briskly but fell 10 cents to $1.26 Wednesday.

A short position of 24,000 shares was partly covered by speculators, leaving a short position of 11,600 shares at last report.

Top oil stock in Wednesday's trade was Seneca Developments, which rose 8 cents to $2.10 on 62,750 shares.

Seneca has a large short position of 73,300 outstanding, which investors hope to cover at lower prices.

Gunn Mines Ltd. continues to lead the list of short sales, with 123,400 outstanding, although this total has shown no tendency to increase.

Meanwhile, the VSE has announced three new underwritings.

Citex Mines Ltd. has sold 100,000 shares to Canarim Investment Corporation Ltd. and a further 100,000 to Carlisle, Douglas and Co. Ltd. at 18 cents per share.

Groundstar Resources Ltd. has had 200,000 shares underwritten by Estevan Investments Ltd. at 35 cents per share.

Nitracell Canada Ltd. has had 200,000 shares underwritten by Continental Securities Corporation at 15 cents per share.

An average of 3 million shares are trading per day in August on the Vancouver Stock Exchange, highest of the year.

Here are the daily averages for the first seven-and-one-half months of 1973.

January	2.6 million	May	1.9 million
February	2.8	June	2.4
March	2.6	July	2.0
April	2.2	August	3.0

Cairn Mines Ltd. has received $61,700 for an agency offering of 400,000 treasury shares and Cairn is no longer in primary distribution.

Tournigan Mining Exploration Ltd., with Donaldson Securities Ltd. as agent, will offer 200,000 treasury shares at a minimum price of 50 cents each until Sept. 10.

A syndicate using German funds has purchased 500,000 shares of Columbia Metals Corporation Ltd. at the equivalent of 51 cents per share plus 6 per cent convertible debentures of the company.

Shares of Sarafand Developments Ltd. were called for trading this week. Sarafund (SRF) has capitalization of 3 million shares with 1.2 million issued.

GRANT, PAROLE FOR FLQ MAN

TORONTO (CP) — The Star says Claude Lariviere, who two years ago pleaded guilty to being an accessory in the 1970 kidnapping and murder of Quebec Labor Minister Pierre Laporte, was given an early parole and later received $10,000 grant from the Canada Council.

Lariviere was sentenced April, 1971, to a total of three years on the charges.

In a Montreal story, the newspaper says Michel Viger, who was arraigned with Lariviere and convicted on the same charges, is serving an eight-year sentence in St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary.

The Star says that this sort of "disparity" in court cases arising from the terrorist campaign of the Front de Liberation du Quebec FLQ three years ago puzzles many persons in political circles.

The newspaper says that former Liberal party associates of Laporte and opponents of the Liberal administrations in Quebec and Ottawa wondered why Lariviere had been "singled out for such official clemency."

Lariviere received complete parole early in 1972. The grant was announced six weeks ago.

The Star says the $10,000 grant was one of a series given for local history research projects.

Lariviere's grant specifically was given "to enable citizens of the St. Henri district in Montreal to write a history of their community with the help of a group of university students."

The Star quotes an official of the Canada Council as saying that Lariviere was highly recommended as being suitable for such a project by three prominent Montreal academics.

Final Offer, Strike Vote Choice Given Hydro Union

Just over 100 electrical workers employed by B.C. Hydro in Greater Victoria will be voting soon on a final offer from the crown corporation.

They will also be taking a strike vote. Leaders of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 258, are urging rejection of the final offer.

The Victoria employees are part of 2,300 electrical workers throughout the province taking part in the votes. Results are expected in early September.

Doug Cronk, business manager and financial secretary of the Local announced the strike vote.

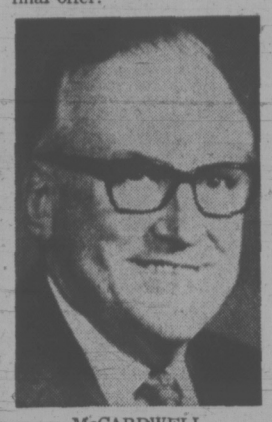

He said it will be held in conjunction with the membership vote on the offer because Hydro made it clear the offer was final and asked that it be submitted to the members.

"That not only closed the door to further negotiations, it padlocked it," said Cronk.

He said the final offer was read to the union negotiators Aug. 2 by Hydro chairman David Cass-Beggs, and that it was disappointing in the light of agreement in principle which had been reached on a number of contentious non-wage issues. Cronk would not divulge the final wage offer, or the union demands.

The negotiating committee recommended rejection the following day and the recommendation was confirmed by the union executive board.

The board agreed to submit it to the membership because of the Hydro request, but also decided to submit it with the recommendation of rejection.

McCARDWELL

Expect the Best

The Optimists of the Pacific Northwest are living up to their reputation for expecting the best and greeting adversity with a smile.

Registration for the Pacific Northwest District Convention of Optimist International starting today at the Empress Hotel has been normal despite the threat of a B.C. Ferries strike which could strand some delegates on the island.

About 250 delegates from B.C., Washington, Oregon and Idaho are expected to register for the annual business meeting which ends Saturday.

Main speakers are International President S. Phil McCardwell of the Optimist Club of Dixie in Louisville, Ky. and A. B. Coning of Victoria. Coning will speak on the wreck of the Torrey Canyon.

The installation of new members and election of governors elect for 1973-74 will be held Saturday at 9 a.m.

Candidate Can Lay Charge: A-G

It appears no investigation will be made into charges a Social Credit party supporter conducted an illegal straw poll in the riding of South Okanagan, where a byelection to replace former Premier W. A. C. Bennett will be held Sept. 7.

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald said Wednesday he "rather doubts" an investigation will be undertaken into charges raised by Conservative candidate Derril Warren.

Merv Carroll, a Vancouver public relations man working on the campaign, has already conceded he violated the provincial Elections Act in conducting the straw poll, which he said consisted of interviews with about 200 people in the riding.

Macdonald said if a candidate feels he has enough evidence to warrant a complaint, he can lay a charge with the local RCMP in the riding.

No Dumping By Alcan

WASHINGTON (CP) — A charge of dumping Canadian aluminum ingots was dismissed Wednesday when the U.S. Tariff Commission ruled the estimated $200 a year in imports of Canadian ingots are not hurting American producers.

The decision, putting an end to one of the largest anti-dumping suits in American history, came 16 months after the giant Aluminum Co. of America (Alcoa) first complained that two of its Montreal-based competitors, Alcan Aluminum Ltd. and Canadian Reynolds Metals Co. Ltd., were selling ingots in the United States at prices lower than they were charging Canadian customers.

A dumping charge was confirmed by the treasury department which sent the case to the Tariff Commission to determine whether American industry was being injured — a necessary condition for imposing special anti-dumping duties.

Alcoa maintained its original complaint had been justified but declined to press for an anti-dumping finding against the Canadians and came close to agreeing with Alcan at the public hearing that the whole case should be dismissed.

LOST GROUND

The tariff commissioners said the Canadian suppliers "were not price aggressors in the U.S. market, making no apparent effort to undersell U.S. producers." Far from increasing their share of the American market by cut-rate pricing, the Canadians had actually lost ground as prices in the U.S. declined in 1971 and early 1972 because of excess American capacity and slack demand.

The lengthy investigation is estimated to have cost hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Alcan accounts for an estimated 90 per cent of the Canadian exports. Canada supplies more than 10 per cent of U.S. ingot market.

Japan Asks Extradition Of Hijackers

TOKYO (AP) — The Japanese government has asked Libya to extradite to Japan four men who hijacked and blew up a Japan Air Lines jumbo jet-liner last month, a government spokesman reported today.

The airliner was hijacked out of Amsterdam and blown up at Libya's Benghazi airport 3½ days later on July 24 after all the passengers and crew were evacuated.

The extradition request also asked that Japan be informed by Libya how the hijackers are being detained, the name of an organization they belong to and the charges against Japan also asked whether the Libyan government intends to exercise its judicial rights regarding the hijacking.

Japan hopes to have the air pirates handed over to Japanese authorities after their trial in Libya, the spokesman said, but Libya, is not a party to the so-called Tokyo agreement for the prevention of hijacking and therefore is not committed to extraditing the hijackers.

Judges Remove Selves From Hearing Agnew Case

BALTIMORE (WP) — The entire panel of U.S. district court judges here disqualified themselves Wednesday from handling any portion of a grand jury investigation into political corruption that might involve Vice-President Spiro Agnew.

Judge Edward Northrup, chief judge of the U.S. district court in Maryland, said the decision had been made by the nine judges "because of the unique position of the vice-president and his relationship to the state of Maryland." Agnew was Baltimore county executive, then governor of Maryland before being elected vice-president.

The chief judge said that all six judges who attended a two-hour meeting Wednesday, including himself, had agreed they were connected in some way with the vice-president's political career and all said they preferred to step away from the Agnew portion of the case.

Northrup said he conferred by phone Tuesday with chief judge Clement Haynsworth of the fourth U.S. circuit court of appeals and Haynsworth agreed to appoint a judge from outside Maryland to handle any matters in the grand jury investigation pertaining to Agnew.

The judge appointed by Haynsworth would have jurisdiction over any questions of executive privelege or separation of powers that might arise, Northrup said.

The vice-president was notified Aug. 1 that he was under investigation by a special federal grand jury for possible tax fraud, extortion, bribery and conspiracy violations. Agnew denied the charges during a press conference last week.

So far in the investigation, constitutional questions apparently have not arisen because Agnew has agreed through his attorneys to make available his personal financial records and by consenting to be questioned by investigators from Beall's office.

Agnew, Tuesday, made clear that he was granting access only to his personal financial and income tax records sought by the prosecutor and not the official records of the vice-president.

"There haven't been any sensitive matters pertaining to the vice-president that have arisen so far," Northrup said. "I hope to hell there aren't."

Northrup referred to the outside judge's duties in the investigation as those of "a fireman waiting for the bell to ring."

The decision to ask for appointment of an outsider to the case was made, he said, after reports were published that the judge now assigned to oversee the grand jury investigation, Stanley Blair, was removed because of his previous connections with Agnew.

Blair, the newest of the Maryland district's nine judges, was Maryland secretary of state under Agnew and later served as Agnew's chief of staff in Washington when Agnew became vice-president.

Northrup denied that Blair had been replaced but said the judge had requested his own removal from the case at Wednesday's meeting of the district's judges.

Agnew, speaking in Denver in his first public appearance since the investigation broke Wednesday night stoutly defended Nixon's right—and by inference his own—to fight back against his critics and accusers.

Without mentioning either Nixon's Watergate troubles or his own difficulties, Agnew told the 24th convention of the International Boilermakers' Union:

"Whether you voted for him (Nixon) or his opponent, I believe that you respect his right to carry out the job he was elected to do. And right now, ladies and gentlemen, he needs your support in carrying out that job."

Halperin Wiretap Admitted

WASHINGTON (WP) — The U.S. justice department admitted Wednesday that it placed a wiretap on the home telephone of former White House aide Morton Halperin for 21 months, but it said it did so lawfully to protect national security.

In a response to a lawsuit filed against the government by Halperin, the department argued that the wiretaps placed on Halperin's telephone between May 12, 1969, and Feb. 10, 1971, were requested by Henry Kissinger, national security adviser, to pinpoint leaks of classified material.

Halperin, formerly an aide to Kissinger and now a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution here, has asked the U.S. district court to penalize Kissinger and 10 other defendants $100 a day for tapping his phone.

Each of the defendants could be assessed damages up to $75,000 for a total of $825,000 under the terms of a wiretap statute in the 1968 Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act.

PRESIDENT WON'T REVEAL NOTES TO THE MILK MEN

WASHINGTON (WP) — The Nixon administration contended Wednesday that inspection of White House papers by the judiciary — even in secret — would "do irreparable injury to the principle of the separation of powers."

Moving to protect the White House's flanks on the contested doctrine of executive privilege, justice department lawyers made the argument in a last-minute effort to block production of some 67 official memos concerning the dairy industry and the government's controversial 1971 increase in milk price supports.

U.S. district court judge William Jones had ordered the government to submit the documents today for his private inspection. The papers are being sought by consumer groups who charged in a lawsuit filed last year that the higher price supports were a payoff for early contributions to Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign.

The government asked for a stay of Judge Jones' order so that the decision could be contested before the U.S. circuit court of appeals here.

Compliance with Judge Jones' ruling, the government lawyers suggested, could also compromise the president's claims of executive privilege in the face of subpoenas by special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox and the senate Watergate investigating committee.

Overriding White House protests in the milk fund case after a July 27 hearing, Judge Jones ruled that the documents involving the dairy industry should be submitted to him so that he could determine which ones, if any, should be handed over to the consumer groups pressing the lawsuit.

A similar solution has been proposed by special Watergate prosecutor Cox.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A Victoria man who pleaded guilty to contributing to the delinquency of juveniles was ordered Wednesday to stay out of parks, playgrounds, school areas and beaches for two years.

Another condition of the two-year probation term for George Press, 70, of 1121 Faithful, was that he stay away from any person under 17.

Press was given the probation term in Victoria provincial court by Judge William Ostler.

In an earlier court appearance, prosecutor Peter Birkett said Press had been seen in Macdonald Park July 4 "committing indecent acts" in front of several small children.

"This is a despicable offence," Judge Ostler told Press.

"You don't know how close you came to going to jail."

★ ★ ★

Isabel O'Brien, 41, of 7 Munn Road, was sentenced to six months in jail for one charge of false pretences, five charges of uttering false documents, and another charge of breach of probation.

"The tragedy in your case is that you are an able, intelligent and hardworking woman but you stoop to crimes involving dishonesty," Ostler told Mrs. O'Brien.

"You are addicted to heroin and you become emotionally involved in situations that aren't good for you.

"I feel very sorry for you and I hope you can free yourself of this heroin addiction and the emotional involvements and make a new life for yourself," Ostler said.

With a stolen Eaton's credit card and false identification documents, Mrs. O'Brien obtained $785 worth of merchandise from Eaton's stores in Nanaimo, Duncan, Victoria and Vancouver between June 1 and Aug. 7.

With the same false documents she obtained $346 worth of goods and cash from various Victoria stores between June 27 and Aug. 8.

The woman was on a probation order for Vancouver offences at the time of the incidents.

She was ordered by Ostler to pay back $985 to the firms she had defrauded.

A suspended sentence and a six-month probationary term were ordered for Barbara Jean Westby, 23, of 831 Ellery.

Miss Westby pleaded guilty to having 14 marijuana plants in her living room July 31. A half-ounce of marijuana was found in her bedroom.

★ ★ ★

Andrew Clarke Thomas, 53, of 959 Balmoral, was sentenced to 10 months in jail for possession of stolen property worth less than $200.

Thomas had in his possession a parcel which came in the mail for another tenant in his apartment complex.

The parcel, containing a pair of shoes, two pairs of underwear and a book on Temperance, was left in the lobby entrance of the building by the mailman.

On a charge of failing to show up for a scheduled court appearance, Thomas was sentenced to a concurrent jail term of 21 days.

★ ★ ★

Ronald Cameron Brighton, 32, of 3547 Charnley Place, was sentenced to three weeks in jail for impaired driving, refusing to take a breathalyzer test and driving while disqualified.

Brighton was stopped by police on Sooke Road Aug. 10. At that time, he was under suspension for a previous impaired driving conviction on June 10.

★ ★ ★

Four men appeared in traffic court and were fined for impaired driving.

Allan H. Christink, 37, of 438 Tribune Crescent, was fined $375 for impaired driving July 4 on Ronald Road.

Reginald Ahtrobus, 63, of 2540 Sooke Road, was fined $400 for a similar offence July 12 on Sooke Road.

Garry Anderson Perry, 40, of 984 Avril, was fined $350 for impaired driving on Highway 1A July 13.

A $175 fine was given to Ernest Chester Leavitt, 55, of 119 Burnett, for impaired driving on Highway 1A July 12.

Crerar, whose appointment was made public through a cabinet order-in-council released Wednesday, will receive a salary of $33,000 per year. His appointment is effective Sept. 10.

Conspiracy by CDC Claimed

Times News Services

HOUSTON — A Texasgulf executive said Wednesday the proposed takeover of the firm by the Canadian Development Corp. (CDC), a government-owned firm, represents a conspiracy to eliminate the U.S. mining and metals firm from competition.

"The CDC offer represents an ominous and chilling expropriation," said Alex Barron, a member of the Texasgulf board of directors, Wednesday at a federal court hearing on a petition to block CDC's acquisition of the firm.

"The evidence presented to this court represents a conspiracy to take over with minimum investment a large multi-national corporation," Barron said. "That conspiracy involved the possible spinning off of American finances."

CDC last month offered $290 million for 10 million shares of Texasgulf stock. The tender offer, if accepted, would give CDC 35 per cent of Texasgulf stock and effective control of the company.

Texasgulf is asking the federal court to grant a preliminary injunction to block the CDC tender offer.

A Canadian law professor testified that the proposed takeover could lead to a conflict of interest.

Prof. Ivan Feltham, a Toronto lawyer and counsel to the Ontario government's select committee on economic and cultural nationalism, said the CDC was established under a statute that requires its officials to act in the best interest of Canada and to give priority to industrial development in Canada.

There is no requirement to maximize profits in the interest of all shareholders, he said, and a conflict of interest there could arise.

Feltham said the CDC would have to act in the best interest of Canada should a decision arise involving a choice between profits and Canada's interests. He added that under Canadian law, any directors elected to a firm controlled by the DCD also would have to be committed to such a goal.

The situation would be different, Feltham said, if private interests in Canada acquired control of Texasgulf in that private firms and individuals are free to maximize profits for all stockholders.

Feltham acknowledged that Canadians are concerned about their "national self-esteem" and the loss of monetary benefits through the high level of foreign ownership and controls of Canadian industr[illegible].

Only Twin Blow Could Cut Off Supply of Beef

Stormy Weather Bred B.C. Fleet

A shutdown of ferry service Friday between Vancouver Island and the mainland would be the second in the 13-year history of B.C. Ferries, the government fleet conceived amid a 1958 strike of two private ferry companies.

The first ferry strike, in mid 1958, was the most significant because one day before it occurred former Premier W. A. C. Bennett announced that a government ferry fleet would be built and service started between Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen.

He said then the action was taken as a result of the strike against Canadian Pacific ferries which began May 16, and the strike against Black Ball which occurred July 18.

Members of the Seafarers International Union went on strike May 16, 1958, against Canadian Pacific's 10 ships linking Victoria and Nanaimo with Vancouver.

Two days later, the Canadian Merchant Service Guild and the National Association of Marine Engineers voted to strike Black Ball, the only remaining ferry link, running between Nanaimo and Vancouver.

They later set a strike deadline of June 25. But the day before, the provincial government seized Black Ball under emergency measures contained in the Civil Defence Act.

Despite the takeover, reports circulated that officers and engineers would walk out anyway and on Friday, July 18 they did. The government ordered them back, but they refused. A court injunction was later issued and the men complied with it. The island was without ferries for four days.

Bennett, in announcing creation of a government ferry fleet the day before the Black Ball walkout, said:

"The government of B.C. is determined that in the future ferry connections between Vancouver Island and the mainland shall not be subject to the whim of union policy nor to the indifference of federal agencies."

And until 1968 he was right. And then, again on a Friday, this time Feb. 16, the ferry fleet was shut down when 800 deck, catering and shore workers—the unlicensed staff—refused to work.

The strike coincided with the dismissal from permanent positions of 160 persons as B.C. Ferries slashed weekend sailings by one-third.

The employees, members of the marine branch (unlicensed) of the B.C. Government Employees Association, protested not only the dismissals but also lack of job security, lack of meaningful seniority and absence of unemployment insurance.

The next day, 200 deck officers and engineers decided to join the strike.

The strike lasted 14 days and the settlement included creation of a six-man board to hear grievances and deal with working conditions and seniority with its findings to be binding; all laid off workers to return to the former status, a ban on further ferry tieups and wage parity with coastal shipping companies.

Victoria meat wholesalers today were concerned — but not alarmed — about the effects a B.C. Ferries strike might have upon the beef supply on Vancouver Island.

Industry spokesmen said the effects would be minor, unless the walkout was accompanied by a rotating strike against the CPR freight vessel, the Carrier Princess.

If both lines were closed, the flow of meat might be cut off.

Most wholesalers have supplies to last from 10 days to two weeks from the start of a strike, so it would take about 15 days of a simultaneous walkout to use up the supply.

A walkout against B.C. Ferries is possible Friday. There was no indication when the CPR vessel might be hit by another rotating strike.

A sudden shortage created by shipping strikes could temporarily raise prices, but these could be expected to fall to about present levels at the conclusion of the walkout.

The new concern arises at a time when stability appeared to be returning to the British Columbia meat industry.

Barring prolonged and simultaneous strikes, the industry expected wholesale and retail prices to stabilize at current levels.

There were small declines in prices at national livestock markets Wednesday.

Any drop in the wholesale price would take a week to 10 days to be reflected at the retail level.

Wholesale beef price in Victoria varies from $1.01 to $1.04 per pound but there is resistance to increases above that level.

On the other hand, there is no sign of a dramatic decline in the beef price, despite the federal government's move to restrict exports to the United States.

The Calgary Cattle Exchange headed off an attempt by ranchers to sell off large quantities of animals at what is believed to be the peak price.

When large shipments began to arrive on Monday, the exchange closed early. If the action had not been taken, the beef market would have been flooded with oversupply, possibly sending the price down 20 cents per pound.

The controlled buying pattern is expected to keep beef prices at about present levels for many weeks, with only the usual small fluctuations in response to supply and demand.

Victoria industry observers said the Calgary exchange had no choice but to control the purchase of cattle because it simply could not handle all the orders of ranchers wanting to sell at what they guessed would be the peak price, following the federal government's restrictions on sales to the United States.

The Canadian beef scare was a direct result of heavy exports to the U.S.

At the retail level, Victorians may see a slight decline in prices next month but no drop is anticipated in August.

The cattle markets were generally dull on the prairies today as ranchers adopt a wait-and-see attitude because prices did not fall sharply as anticipated.

The rush to market that occurred Monday has subsided. In Edmonton there were too few butcher cattle offered to establish a market.

Sales were a little more brisk in Winnipeg but most attention was centred on hogs where a record price of $70.15 a hundredweight was established.

School Rolls Down 800

Greater Victoria's school population will decline by as much as 800 pupils this September.

Projected enrolment for the 1973-74 school year is 30,023 compared to 30,878 pupils registered last September at the district's 54 schools.

Most of the population decrease is at the elementary school level — the result of a declining birth rate in Victoria since the early 1960s — and some secondary schools are still expecting small increases in enrolment.

But while the pupil population is decreasing, school board officials are quick to point out that the teacher population is rising.

"With the drop in enrolment we would normally have not filled 20 teaching positions which were vacated," says Glenn Wall, associate director of instruction.

"But we replaced those 20 teachers and added 25 more. So we have 45 more than we would have had last year with this population," says Wall.

★

"One of the priorities of the (school) board is to improve the student-teacher ratio," he said.

British Columbia has traditionally had a poor student-teacher ratio average, with Vancouver recording the worst average of major cities across Canada.

In Victoria the ratio is officially 22.35 pupils per teacher, but school board officials admit the figure is not meaningful since it includes many adults who are not actually teaching in the classroom.

Victoria's ratio does not compare well with provinces such as Ontario or Quebec and it would be difficult to find a classroom in the city with less than 25 pupils.

Next year will improve, Wall says, adding that qualifications of the new teachers hired is exceptionally high.

More than 2,000 teachers applied for jobs in the district this year and only 136 have been hired so far.

Victoria receives a greater number of job applications than a district this size would normally receive, Wall says, perhaps because of its favorable climate and location.

There is no strict school board policy on the criteria for hiring teachers but experience is a major factor.

★

"We are often accused of hiring lesser qualified teachers but that's not the case," says Wall. "The greater percentage of those hired for this district next year have one to five years experience."

Some districts tend to hire teachers with fewer qualifications in order to save money.

"We do hire grads directly out of university as well," Wall says, "especially those in special subject areas. We want to get young and eager teachers but we want to strike a balance."

Experience outside the classroom is important, he says, so they look carefully at the summer jobs of university students.

"We like well-rounded people," says Wall.

The school district continues to recruit teachers both at the universities and in Vancouver during the school Easter vacation.

Dairies to Up Cost Of Solid Products

Ice cream, sour cream, cottage cheese, yogurt and skim milk products are expected to increase in price next month.

The increases — probably one or two cents—are the result of producer price adjustments recently allowed by the federal government.

"We can't absorb the increase," said Fraser Valley Milk Producers' Association sales manager W. J. Aird, of Vancouver.

He declined to speculate how much the retail price of dairy goods would rise until the situation is examined in detail.

But he explained that when the federal government last week allowed a higher price to be asked by farmers and increased the government subsidy, it meant the balance has to be picked up by the manufacturer and hence the consumer.

This will mean price adjustments by not only direct-sales dairies, but also final processors such as ice cream stands.

One operator said when she last made an adjustment she reduced the quantity of ice cream in a 15-cent cone from 3½ to three ounces instead of raising the price.

Although the changes will not affect liquid milk prices at this time, those who buy powdered skim milk for mixing into table milk at home may find about one cent a quart difference in price.

GIRL KILLED, SISTERS HURT

A Saanich girl was killed and her three sisters injured when their car tore through a guard rail and down an embankment on the Malahat late Wednesday night.

Colwood RCMP said today Lena Anderssen, 16, of 2225 Greenlands, was proncounced dead on arrival at Victoria General Hospital.

One of the sisters, Kersti, 20, is in critical condition with head injuries. Herdis, 17, is in fair condition, while 13-year-old Kari-Anne is in good condition.

Police said injuries included a broken leg, chest and head injuries.

Details of the crash were sketchy, but police said only one car was involved. It is not known which of the four sisters was driving.

The accident occurred at the top of Tunnel Hill, 1½ miles north of Goldstream Park and 14 miles from Victoria.

'Voracious Appetite' For Heroin Won't Ease

A Victoria man with a "voracious appetite" for heroin admitted today to a rash of break-ins in the Saanich area over the last 10 days.

Allan Scott Alexander, 21, of 511 Davida, pleaded guilty in Victoria provincial court today to seven break-ins, the profits of which supported his three-capsule-a-day heroin habit.

Police said one capsule of heroin sells for between $35-$50.

The first break-in took place Aug. 6 when Alexander broke into a service station and stole $27 from a pop machine, a cigarette machine and the cash register.

Alexander was caught red-handed by Saanich police early today as he was prying open a cigarette machine at another gas station.

A Saanich police officer testified that Alexander had netted a total of $220 from the seven break-ins.

Judge William Ostler remanded the case until Aug. 30 for a pre-sentence report and sentence. Alexander will remain in custody until that time.

"You have a voracious appetite for heroin and whether you want to or not, you are likely to turn to crime to support it," Ostler said.

In another case, a man who tried to move his motorcycle around a corner must spend the next 15 weekends in jail.

Gordon Howard Harris, 21, of 1246 Montrose, was stopped by police on Douglas Street Aug. 2 and given a roadside suspension.

An hour later, police saw Harris riding his motorcycle.

Harris told Judge Ostler his bike was worth $3,000 and he only wanted to ride it around the corner to a safer place.

Ostler told Harris he would impose a weekend jail sentence so it would not interrupt Harris' studies at Camosun College.

Trial Ordered For Morrison

A Victoria man has been committed for trial in a higher court on a charge of capital murder after a preliminary hearing Wednesday afternoon.

Royden Gaylord Morrison, 42, of 132 Dallas, is charged with the March 14 stabbing of Wallace Omar Stephenson, 51, also of 132 Dallas.

A charge of non-capital murder against Morrison was dropped during the preliminary hearing before Judge Edmond St. Jorre.

A. Strangely enough, this honor goes to the male silkworm moth, which in Britain is called the Emperor moth. German experiments carried out in 1961 showed that the male could detect the sex attractant of the female at an almost unbelievable range of between six and eight miles!

History Repeated—at $2.61 an Hour

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

In a busy classroom at Mount Douglas Secondary School 15 students are assembling their version of the history of Victoria.

They have discovered that a cougar was shot on the site of James Bay's Beckley Farm on Christmas Day in 1903.

The guns at Fort Rodd Hill have never been fired in anger, the students learned, and the cannons were mainly used to try to impress the local Indians.

Samuel Maclure built more than 100 of his majestic homes in Victoria around the turn of the century and most of them are still standing.

The provincial government is paying the students $2.61 an hour for their research during the six-week project which is one of hundreds of special student employment projects sponsored across B.C.

Total cost of province-wide scheme is $959,000.

The Mount Douglas program is under the direction of teachers Shirley Bell and Brian Cornall, who had already received school board grants to prepare instruction kits on Victoria's history.

After researching at the provincial and city archives, at various libraries and private collections, and at historic sites in the city, the students are preparing 21 teaching kits on aspects of Victoria's history.

The topics range from urban development studies on James Bay, Oak Bay and Old Town to histories of transportation, architecture and the military in the city.

Each kit will include visual aids such as maps, pictures and slides, as well as written material, copies of old newspaper clippings, suggested field trips and assignments, and some audio-visual tapes.

The students' work will be submitted to Greater Victoria school board which will make copies of the kits for use by elementary and secondary teachers throughout the city.

Miss Bell says she hopes other centres in the province will conduct similar projects during the summer and eventually an exchange of research material can be worked out.

"History is dull and dry the way they teach it now," says Debby Wilson, one of the students working on the Mt. Doug program.

The visual aids and field trips included in the kits will hopefully make history more meaningful, Debby says.

By studying history close at hand, the students feel school children will have a chance to see how history happens and how much the past influences life in the city today.

"History doesn't appeal to people because it's made so boring," says another student, Graham Fligg.

"Now we've learned the teachers' point of view as well," Graham said, adding that the students have learned some of the techniques of researching.

The Mt. Doug project is one of 15 in Victoria which will cost the provincial government $42,326 plus 10 per cent payroll costs.

Sixty students, all Grade 12 graduates who will go on to post-secondary studies, are employed in the projects which are mainly designed to collect and prepare instructional aids for schools.

Those projects include preparation of metric conversion charts, consumer education and textile kits, B.C. history materials, social studies and biology collections.

Four students have been working with pupils at Victor School for the mentally retarded; two have been operating libraries at various elementary schools in the district and another student has been assisting in office functions at the school board.

Lindsey Pulls Stamps Into Lead

CALGARY (CP)— A touchdown march led by backup quarterback Jim Lindsey early in the fourth quarter sparked Calgary Stampeders to an 18-9 victory Wednesday night over Winnipeg Blue Bombers in a Western Football Conference game.

The win, before 23,287 fans, pushed the Stampeders into a three-way tie for first place with Saskatchewan Roughriders and Edmonton Eskimos in the Western Conference, all with 2-1 records. Winnipeg dropped to the conference cellar with a 1-3 standing.

Calgary had a 9-8 edge when Lindsey replaced starting quarterback Pete Liske late in the third quarter. Six minutes into the final stanza, the rangy Texan began a 65-yard march with a 15-yard pass to fullback Bob Wyatt, scampered for 21 yards himself and then tossed a 24-yard touchdown pass to Gerry Shaw.

"Jim knows the offence a hell of a lot better than Pete," head coach Jim Duncan said after the win. "It's tough to come to a club late in training camp and put it all together.

"Tonight, I figured we had to make the change because we weren't getting what we wanted and we know Jim can call the plays."

Stampeders opened scoring early in the first quarter after tackle Max Huber recovered a punt fumbled by Winnipeg's John Steele at the Bombers' 12. Liske connected with Shaw for six points and Larry Robinson converted.

Three seconds later, Rudy Linterman booted the first of two singles he scored off kickoffs, giving Calgary an 8-0 lead.

Only in the second quarter could Winnipeg manage a sustained offence, with quarterback Don Jonas putting together a 73-yard march for Winnipeg's only touchdown. Passes of 22 yards to Tommy Pharr and 42 yards to Bob LaRose brought Bombers to Calgary's seven. Rookie fullback Lee Fobbs carried to the four, then caught a pass in the end zone.

Winnipeg's Gene Lakusiak added a single four seconds later off the kickoff, ending the half 8-8.

In the third quarter Robinson managing a single on a missed field goal and Don Moulton punting a 61-yard single.

Linterman's second single off a kickoff came three seconds after Lindsey led the Stampeders on their final big drive.

Three players later, Walt McKee boomed out an 85-yard single at 6:15 to close out scoring for the hapless Bombers.

Lindsey led Calgary in rushing with 66 yards on nine carries, and completed seven of 13 tosses for 103 yards.

OLLIE DOROHOY

Ollie Dorohoy Pilots Cougars

"This year we are truly optimistic. We'll be in the playoffs."

Eric Bishop, general-manager of Victoria Cougars, voiced this opinion during a press conference Wednesday afternoon announcing details of an organizational shuffle in the Western Canada Hockey League club.

And capping it all came the disclosure that Ollie Dorohoy has been appointed as coach for the upcoming season.

The 50-year-old Dorohoy, a well-known professional player with New Westminster and Seattle during the 1940s and 1950s, replaces Bob Briscoe, who took over as co-coach with Bishop following the resignation of Mitch Pechet midway through last season.

Briscoe will retain his former position as chief scout and assistant to Bishop. He will also take over the duties of Tom Hookway, who has resigned as director of player personnel to devote more time to his family.

Dorohoy, following his 13 seasons as a player, coahed Nelson of the Western International League for the 1958-59 season and guided Brandon Wheat Kings of the Manitoba Junior League from 1960 to 1962.

His most recent coaching experience was with New Westminster Royals of the B.C. Junior League in the 1969-70 season when he took over from Buster Brayshaw.

Bishop first contacted Dorohoy about six weeks ago and negotiations with the Coquitalam resident produced a one-year contract with an option.

Dorohoy, who will move to Victoria with his wife and daughter at the end of the month, will be conducting the first workouts for Cougars when training camp opens Sept. 17 in Memorial Arena. Nanaimo Clippers, the Cougars' BCJHL farm club, will also hold the first part of their training camp here.

Dorohoy said he wanted no lazy players "or complainers" and was looking for toughness and size as prime requisites.

Politics: Why Drapeau Should Win the West

The other side of the story — and this is what has annoyed people in Ontario — is that B.C. got the recent Canada Summer Games because Garibaldi didn't get the Winter Olympics in 1976.

So why is everybody in B.C. mad at Montreal and mayor Jean Drapeau for getting the Summer Olympics in 1976?

It doesn't make sense, especially in B.C. Because think of the many blessings that came to the lower mainland last week because of the Canada Games, which wouldn't have been there if it hadn't been for Drapeau and Montreal in the first place. So why not pitch in and help the beleaguered Drapeau?

Some musings left over from the Burnaby-New Westminster Games, perhaps, but with backing that makes sense. But first, about that spinoff from the decision of the International Olympic Committee in Amsterdam in the spring of 1969:

You'll recall, no doubt, the B.C. bid for the winter Olympics had the backing of the federal and provincial governments when it was made, and it also appeared to have the inside track until international politics came into play.

They are the same as local politics but in the hands of experts.

No Back-Slapping by Tom

That's when the Western world decided that if no Communist nation had ever played host to the Olympics before, 1976 wasn't the year to start. Thus Moscow was rejected and the entire Soviet delegation immediately walked out.

Then when the Americans couldn't profitably promote Los Angeles, all the Western bloc votes went to Montreal and Canada was in. Surprisingly, it is true. But in!

But when Canada (Montreal) was recognized, B.C. (Garibaldi) was rejected. Because, by the same token, if no nation had ever played host to both the summer and winter Olympics in the same year, now wasn't the time to break that pattern either.

That's when Denver got the winter games: and that was a form of consolation prize too. Hadn't the U.S. backed Canada against Russia and if B.C. was out, why not keep things tidy and in North American somehow. See? Now Denver has coughed up the prize. But that's another story.

Vancouver, naturally, was disappointed. Mayor Tom Campbell even declined to rise when Drapeau entered the room at the Montreal victory party that night — he went right on nibbling his hors d'oeuvres. Meanwhile, back home, up for grabs were the Summer Games of '73; and with the general plan being to hold them in medium-sized towns, the lobbying was on in earnest and from the West too. Vancouver didn't qualify, but what about the suburbs?

If memory serves correctly there were over 20 Canadian cities which wanted a piece or that federal pie (it worked out to $1.9 million in Burnaby-New Westminster) to upgrade old facilities and provide new ones.

Unity Is a Nasty Word

Victoria was in the stakes; so were Kamloops and Kelowna. So were several centres in Ontario; and the general consensus was Ontario had the inside track and the others could wait their turn.

But wait. Wheels within wheels were at work.

If Burnaby-New Westminster was an outsider, it also got a lot more consideration than it figured to because of its close proximity to a metropolitan centre, Vancouver. That's Ontario's beef. And as health minister John Munro was indeed partial to Garibaldi's Olympic bid, and not Montreal's at Amsterdam, he was also in a position to rule on the site of the '73 Summer Games. What better way to keep the faith out west? Now Vancouver has benefitted and Ontario is still screaming, and likely won't get its turn until at least 1981.

In return, is B.C. appreciative? Not really, because just recently the government indicated it won't officially go along with any lottery plan to assist Montreal; and it probably won't send Drapeau a thank-you note for getting the Canada Games out here, indirect as it was, either.

Nobody's thought of that, have they? Or to offer him a helping hand for his little party in '76.

But then why should they? All it concerns is something called unity, something a nation is supposed to be all about, but something we don't seem to have much of anymore. Even in sport.

ARGOS BY ONE

TORONTO (CP) — Toronto Argonauts once again are charting an early course toward the elusive Grey Cup.

The Argos edged Montreal Alouettes 22-21 Wednesday night before 33,135 fans for their third consecutive victory in the Eastern Football Conference.

It was the first loss of the season for the Alouettes who previously shared first place with the Argos, each with 2-0 won-lost records.

Although victory didn't come handily for the Argonauts, it was accomplished without the services of several regulars who were sidelined with injuries and without running back Leon McQuay, traded early today to Calgary Stampeders of the Canadian Football League's Western Conference in return for defensive tackle Granville Liggins.

Toronto quarterback Joe Theismann, who suffered a toe injury last week, passed to Erie Allen for one Toronto touchdown and Mike Eben caught a 10-yard scoring toss from running back Marv Kendricks to clinch the victory.

Johnny Rodgers, last year's Heisman Trophy winner, led the visitors, scoring twice in the final quarter.

Whalley Pitchers Give Up Nothing

As expected, pitching had been the dominant feature of the Canadian Little League baseball championships at Lambrick Park. Wednesday was no exception.

Two fine performances, one by Whalley's Jerry Atamanchuck, and the other by Mickey Collison of Brockville, Ont., marked the third day's play in the double knockout event and reduced the number of teams to three.

Whalley, B.C., who had shut out Quebec 4-0 in 10 innings, Tuesday, as Glen Ister pitched a two hitter over the first nine innings, scored another shutout Wednesday, 8-0 over Calgary Centennials behind Atamanchuk.

Collison, a loser to Calgary in the opener because of control problems—he walked six batters in one inning—was sharp Wednesday as he limited Quebec to just one hit, a single by losing picher Jean Grenier.

It was the second straight blanking for Quebec who had opened the tournament with a sixth-inning come-from-behind 2-1 triumph over Victoria Nationals.

Collison also hit a home run in his own cause. It was his second of the championships. He struck out nine and walked only one.

Grenier was almost as effective for Quebec as he suffered his first defeat of the year. He gave up a triple to Pete Clow, the first batter, and Clow scored on a passed ball. He then blanked Brockville until the sixth when Collison homered.

Whalley got away quickly in the first inning on two walks, four singles and a Calgary error for a 3-0 lead. They added a singleton in the second and then pushed across four runs in the fourth inning. Terry Scramstad had three hits for Whalley including a home run in the second and Oster had four-for four in the team's 13-hit attack.

Brockville plays Calgary again tonight at 6:30 with the winner to meet Whalley Friday night. If Whalley wins the championship is theirs; if not a deciding game would be scheduled Saturday.

An Inglorious End As Rocks Bow Out

By MAX LOW
Times Staff

Well, that's it for 1973.

The end came for the Shamrocks Wednesday night at Memorial Arena—and they certainly didn't go out in style.

Upset early by some questionable refereeing and then frustrated for the rest of the time by poor shooting, Shamrocks crashed to a 14-7 defeat at the hands of Coquitlam Adanacs.

It was the third straight win in five night for the Adanacs and gave them the best-of-five Western Lacrosse Association playoff semi-final series three games to one. Coquitlam now meets the league champion Vancouver Burrards in the best-of-seven final.

Shamrocks got off to their usual fast start with two early goals but a couple of cheap penalties brought Coquitlam two power-play goals and then some doubtful calls enabled the Adanacs to take a 5-3 lead into the second period.

Referees Ken Harrison and Ron Mason were loudly booed by the crowd of 1,971 when they left the floor at the end of the first period.

Although Tom Somner scored the Shamrocks' fastest goal of the season—just 10 seconds after the start of the second period—Adanacs were soon back in control and hammered in five straight goals to lead 10-4 before goalkeeper Skip Chapman was pulled and backup George Grover came on at 13:38.

The crowd was pretty disgruntled and certainly showed it at 13:05 of the second period.

That was when Brian Thompson of the Shamrocks sent in a hard shot which Coquitlam goalkeeper Dave Wedlock stopped but then dropped over the line. One of the referees raised his arms to signify a goal but the other didn't see it go over the line and asked the goal judge, who was unsighted, too.

There was no goal allowed and when Dave Thomson voiced a few words of protest, he was hustled off to the penalty box to serve a 10-minute misconduct.

The crowd had had enough. Someone hurled a bag of popcorn at a referee and programs rained down on the floor. There was a delay while it was all cleaned up.

It was a blow for the Shamrocks. It was a goal, alright. The ball crossed the line. And WLA commissioner Colin Cruickshank agreed.

But, apart from the incident, Cruickshank backed the referees to the hilt for "doing a fine job."

Dave Wedlock, who a week ago, couldn't seem to stop a thing when the Rocks romped to a 22-9 win in the series opener, again held the key to victory—just as he had done in the second and third games.

John Allen, top goal-getter in the league, scored three times and set up four other goals and league scoring champion Kevin Parsons also got three goals. But Parsons also made four trips to the penalty box for some pretty rugged play including a five-minute major for a brutal slashing of the face of Dennis Somner.

All round, it was the poorest effort of the season by both team.

Bakers Boost Lead

SURREY — Victoria McDonalds need only to win Saturday night at Memorial Arena to reach the Pacific Junior "A" Lacrosse League playoff final.

Some sharpshooting by defenceman Jim Lynch, fine goaltending by John Hamilton and a great all-round effort from the rest of the players Wednesday night enabled the league champions to swamp Surrey Salmonbellies 19-7.

It was the second straight win in the best-of-five semi-final series for the Bakers, who crushed Surrey 22-8 in the opener Sunday night.

Lynch fired in seven goals, including three in the first period when McDonalds took a 7-1 lead, and also had two assists.

Jeevan Dillon scored four times for McDonalds and Dan Green, who also had seven assists, and Rick Sage got two goals each. The other Victoria scorers were Lorry Gloeckner, Norm Baker, Kim Browning and Mike Yeager.

Mark Kenney and Rick Boucher each had two goals for Surrey.

TONY ROSE SAILING SIXTH

TROIA, Portugal (CP) — The United States won the third race in laser class series at the world youth sailing championships Wednesday to move into first place.

The U.S. leads the series with 15.7 points followed by Britain with 21.7.

Tony Rose of Victoria, who won the first race Monday, is sixth with 38 points.

Confusion continued to reign over the 470 class series as officials have not ruled on Tuesday's protests. Wednesday, eight more protests were submitted after the third race.

Al Smith Retains Second Position

NANAIMO — Don McLeod of Tacoma won his second straight main event in the third leg of the 4th annual International Drivers' Challenge series for modifieds and caged sprint cars before nearly 3,000 fans Wednesday night at Grandview Bowl.

McLeod, who won the second "A" main Tuesday at Victoria's Western Speedway, also won the Nanaimo portion of the series last year.

George Robertson of Lewiston, Idaho, the current points leader with 371, finished second during the 100-lap feature race while Fred Ede of Fresno, Calif., who had held the lead from the 35th to 74th lap, hung on for third place.

Roy Smith of Victoria, who won the opening race at Tenino, Wash., finished fourth and gained enough points from his placings in the race as well as in the time trials to retain second place in point standings with 353.

Results:

"A" Trophy dasn: 1. George Robertson, Lewiston, Idaho; 2. Jerry Sneva, Spokane.

"B" Trophy dash: 1. Bob Cochran, Seattle; 2. Barry Chamberlain, Coquitlam; 3. Cliff Hucul, Prince George; 4. Rick Horton, Concord, Calif.

"B" main event: 1. Cliff Spalding, Seattle; 2. Rick Horton; 3. Ken Hamilton, Boise, Idaho; 4. Aaron Capps, Bremerton.

"A" main event: 1. Don McLeod, Tacoma; 2. George Robertson; 3. Fred Ede, Fresno, Calif.; 4. Roy Smith, Victoria.

Petes Beat Victoria Club

WHITBY, Ont. — Peterborough took a 9-7 decision and eliminated Victoria A. J. Barr Construction from the national peewee lacrosse championship tournament here Wednesday.

In another quarter-final game played in the "A" division of the tourney, Brampton nipped Richmond, 7-6.

The championship is scheduled to end with the final on Sunday.

Alan's Boys Getting Ready For All Blacks' Conquerors

'Tis the season for tennis, for cricket, for softball and swimming, or for just plain lazing in the sun.

It isn't the season for rugby—but you try telling that to Alan Rees and his boys!

Twenty-eight of them have been training hard three nights a week for the last five weeks at the University of Victoria and Rees says with a glint in his eye they are "getting ready."

What they're getting ready for could be two of the best rugby displays seen in Victoria for many years.

Llanelli, Welsh club champion and considered the best club team in the world after a shock win over the New Zealand All Blacks last winter, is on its way.

★ ★ ★

The Welsh side, which opened its Canadian tour by humiliating the Cariboux Club 47-9 in Montreal last weekend, will play a Victoria Rugby Union President's XV at 6:30 p.m. at Royal Athletic Park on Tuesday, Aug. 28 and will take on the Victoria Crimson Tide at 2:30 p.m. on Saturday, Sept. 1 at Centennial Stadium.

Llanelli boasts eight full Welsh internationals and five "B" internationals plus Carwyn James, who coaches the British Lions.

Welsh-born Rees, coach of the Crimson Tide and of Castaways Club, can't help being impressed, but he's not overawed.

"You have to rate them as No. 1 in the world after they beat the All Blacks," Rees said during a short break from training. "We know they're tough, but there's no way we're going to bow down to them."

Playing this kind of team, said Rees, can't help but benefit the standard of rugby on Vancouver Island.

"In other words, the better they are, the more we'll get out of it."

Both the President's XV and the Tide team will be chosen out of Rees' 28-man squad and for several young players it will be their first taste of international rugby.

Rees successfully developed the "large-squad" system last season with an idea of getting two games where possible against touring sides and of grooming young players for future Tide appearances. But he warns that "several key players" are on holiday or haven't started training yet and the Tide won't be at top strength.

Rees glanced out at the field, where they were stilll going hard at it, and said "the boys I have will be fit and ready and we'll give a good account of ourselves."

Also due to play the Crimson Tide—on Thursday, Sept. 27—is the Fiji national team, always a great crowd pleaser with its tricky running and bright, open play.

The three games are a prelude to what Rees and Victoria Rugby Union president Don Burgess both predict will be "an exciting rugby season" containing new rules, new clubs in the union and an interlocking schedule with Vancouver clubs.

Details aren't finalized yet, but Victoria clubs expect to play four games each—two home and two away—against first-division clubs in Vancouver.

Joining the Union are the newly-formed Peninsula Agrarians of Saanich and Camosun College.

And new lineout rules, introduced not on the usual trial basis but as an immediate law throughout the world, will be in effect here right from the first game with Llanelli.

The rules, designed to cut down the amount of rough stuff and to prevent lifting of players in the lineouts, stipulate that players on the same team must stand a yard apart and that there must be two feet between the opposing lines.

★ ★ ★

As well, Victoria officials are figuring prominently on the national and international rugby scene.

Rees was sent by the B.C. Rugby Union to attend the Scottish Rugby Union's coaching course in Edinburgh last month and says he's pleased to report "we are doing exactly what they are doing over there."

And Burgess will be one of five Canadian coaches at the Irish Rugby Union's course from Aug. 23 to 30.

It all adds up to a bright beginning to the 1973-74 season.

As Burgess says, "We certainly couldn't start on a more exciting vein . . ."

Dave McNally Foils Escape by Rangers

By The Associated Press

Washington Senators moved to Texas but couldn't get away from Dave McNally.

They may be the Texas Rangers to most, but to McNally they're the Texas Patsies.

"I'll admit I've done some good pitching against this team," said McNally after whipping Texas 5-1 Wednesday night for his 17th straight victory over the Rangers.

McNally started his winning streak in 1968, when the team was in Washington. He can't explain it, only enjoy it.

"I know it's going to end sooner or later. I don't approach the Rangers any differently than any other team," said McNally.

In other American League games, California Angels beat New York Yankees 3-1; Kansas City Royals stopped Cleveland Indians 5-1; Milwaukee Brewers nipped Chicago White Sox 5-4 and Minnesota Twins downed Detroit Tigers 9-7. Rain postponed Oakland at Boston.

McNally had a no-hitter going until Toby Harrah led off the seventh inning with a single. The only other hit off the Baltimore left-hander was a home run by Bill Sudakis in the eighth.

"This was probably my best outing of the season," said McNally, who improved his record to 11-13. "I knew I had a no-hitter going, that's no secret. But that wasn't my prime consideration. It was just a point of protecting my lead."

By the time the stingy McNally had given up the first Ranger hit, his Oriole mates had built a 5-0 lead with an unearned run in the first, a two-run homer by Earl Williams in the fourth and a two-run single by Tommy Davis in the seventh.

The victory moved Baltimore into first place in the American League East, one-half game over Detroit.

Winston Llenas' pinch single with two out in the eighth inning drove home the tie-breaking run and sparked California to a 3-1 decision over New York.

Al Fitzmorris scattered seven hits for his fifth straight victory since his recall from the minors to lead Kansas City to a 5-1 verdict over Cleveland.

A bases-loaded sacrifice fly by John Briggs in the ninth inning scored Dave May and carried Milwaukee over Chicago 5-4.

Larry Hisle's two-run homer in the eighth inning powered Minnesota to a 9-7 success over Detroit. Before Hisle won the game for the Twins, the Tigers had tied it 7-7 in the top of the eighth on Ed Brinkman's home run.

In the National League, Cincinnati scored in the ninth inning to edge Pittsburgh Pirates 1-0, Atlanta Braves Braves crushed Chicago Cubs 15-1, San Francisco Giants swamped Philadelphia Phillies 11-2, New York Mets blanked San Diego Padres 7-0, Houston Astros beat St. Louis Cardinals 3-0 and Los Angeles defeated Montreal Expos 7-2.

Upset Victory By Bradshaw

OTTAWA — A brilliant comeback ending in a thrilling third-set tiebreaker win Wednesday enabled Glen Bradshaw of Victoria to pull off the first major upset of the Canadian closed junior tennis championships.

Bradshaw dropped the first set 6-4 but fought back to take the next two 7-5, 7-6, and oust third-seeded Greg Halder of Toronto in the boys 18-and-under singles.

In the 16-and-under section, where Bradshaw is seeded fourth, the Victoria player sidelined Gill White of St. Catharines, Ont., 6-1, 6-2.

Fifteen-year-old Brenda Cameron of Victoria had an easy time in the girls' 16-and-under singles, beating Sylvia Bessette of Montreal 6-0, 6-0.

But sisters Wendy and Lori Barlow of Victoria both lost in the 16-and-under category and Lori was also beaten in the 14-and-under section.

In the higher age group, Lise Senn of Toronto downed Wendy Barlow 6-4, 6-2 and top-seeded Marjorie Blackwood of Toronto defeated Lori Barlow 7-6, 6-2.

And in the 14-and-under singles, Lori went down 6-1, 6-0 to Nicolle Marois of Quebec.

The championships end Saturday.

Victoria Bates, defending provincial champions and second-place finishers in the Northwest International League this season, will open against Fraser Arms of New Westminster.

Seaboard Construction and Bell's Men's Wear, other Victoria contenders from the Stuffy McGinnis League, also face New Westminster squads. Seaboard tackles Burden's Royals while Bells go against Labatts.

Fraser Valley Merchants were drawn against New Westminster Russells and North Vancouver Merchants drew the first-round bye.

Following is the opening-day schedule:

(Other games at 2, 4, 6:30 and 8:30 p.m.)

Century Scores

Two-run homers by pitcher Bill Polz and catcher Terry Oscarson in the fourth inning helped Century Inn top Six Mile House 7-2 Wednesday night in the opening game of the best-of-three district senior "B" men's softball playoff at Heywood Avenue Park.

Second game of the series is scheduled for 6:30 tonight at Central Park. Winner of the series advances to the B.C. tournament.

Six Mile 000 010 1— 2 6 0
Century Inn 110 500 x— 7 7 2

Nanaimo Wins Title

NANAIMO — With a 9-8 win over Victoria London Boxing Club in the deciding game Wednesday night, Nanaimo City took the Vancouver Island Senior "C" Lacrosse League playoff final series by three games to two.

The Boxers were shorthanded and dressed only nine players. Nanaimo led 3-2 at the end of the first period but the score was tied 7-7 after two periods.

Nanaimo now goes on to the Pacific Coast Championships next week.

Miss Austin took the title by one stroke over four other competitors.

Miss Austin improved on an opening-round 85 to come from three strokes off the pace to win.

Joan Lawson of Victoria made a strong closing bid to grab the title, missing a first-place deadlock by one shot as she fashioned an 81 Wednesday for a total of 170.

Tied with Mrs. Lawson, one stroke off the pace were Mona Pump of Vancouver, Kay Helleur of Toronto and Fern Irwin of Milton, Ont.

First-round leader Dulcie Lyle, the 1971 champion, blew to an 89 Wednesday after an opening-round 82 and ended at 171, two strokes back.

In the team competition, Ontario scored an eight-shot win over British Columbia with a score of 505 to B.C.'s 513. Quebec was next at 527 followed by Alberta at 537.

Manitoba was fifth with a 545 total followed by Nova Scotia at 556, Saskatchewan at 557, New Brunswick at 581, Newfoundland at 596 and Prince Edward Island at 651.

Dale Shaw Eliminated On Last Hole

MONTCLAIR, N.J. — Victoria's Dale Shaw was eliminated on the 18th hole Wednesday, finishing 1-down to Catherine Morse of Rochester, N.Y., in the second round of match play in the U.S. women's amateur golf championship.

Miss Shaw, who was the only Canadian remaining in the tournament, had an easy 9-and-7 win in the first round Tuesday.

Three-time U.S. amateur champion Mrs. Stephen Sander of Seattle, who had been out of competitive golf for three years, trounced Mrs. John Oliver of Pittsburgh 7 and 6 to become one of the 16 reaching the third round.

Two match-play rounds today will reduce the field to four for Friday's semi-finals.

Sunday Racing

VANCOUVER (CP) — City council has approved Sunday horse racing at Exhibition Park during the Pacific National Exhibition.

Because the city charter bans Sunday horse racing, the Jockey Club now will need permission from the B.C. cabinet.

IT BUYS A LOT MORE THAN JUST THE LOWEST PRICED SMALL CAR.†

It buys the biggest selling small car in Canada.

Source: R.L. Polk 1973 Passenger Car Registration to May 31.

Year after year, more Toyotas are sold than any other small car, domestic and import alike. And for a good reason: feature for feature, dollar for dollar, there simply isn't a better small car buy anywhere.

Take a look at how our Toyota Corolla 1200, the lowest priced Toyota (and the lowest priced popular small car), stacks up against the lowest priced domestic, Ford's Pinto:

	Toyota Corolla 1200	Ford Pinto
List Price	$2299	$2334
Front Disc Brakes	Standard	Optional at Extra Cost
Reclining Bucket Seats	Standard	Not available
Flip-open rear windows	Standard	Optional at Extra Cost

The Toyota Corolla, with its standard reclining bucket seats and front disc brakes, still sells for $35.00 less than the stripped-down Pinto. And at the same time, gives you more front legroom, more rear legroom, more trunk space and more horsepower (65 net vs. 54 net). Source: Motor Trend Apr. '73.

It buys an economy car that is truly economical.

Think all small cars are good on gas? Some are a lot better than others, as you can see by this chart of the results of the recent U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's study on gas consumption.

Mileage Comparison Chart

It buys a small car with a better resale value than even the Volkswagen.

Toyota automobiles are built to withstand rugged Canadian conditions. Because they were built for rugged Canadian conditions. And tested here. So you get a tough, solid car that will hold up well. The proof? In the official industry guide to used car values (known as "the black book") used Toyotas consistently rate higher re-sale values than Volkswagens.

It buys 250 Toyota dealers all across the country. 1200 throughout North America.

Our dealer organization is big and getting bigger all the time. (We now have 18 more dealers than Volkswagen does.) And since our dealers don't have to worry about servicing a huge line-up of cars of all sorts and sizes the way domestic dealers do, you can count on better, faster, service. Small cars are all we sell. And small cars are all we service. So your Toyota dealer has more time to give you more personal attention.

It buys one of the most advanced computer controlled parts systems in the industry.

How do you keep track of the approximately 1½ million individual parts on hand in our 250 dealerships across the country? Or the additional 3½ million stored away in our four huge regional parts depots? With a computer of course. But not just any computer. Our IBM 370/375 fills an entire room, and represents the most advanced computer technology money can buy. It constantly checks and updates our huge parts inventory.

If a dealer is out of an item, he simply calls on our back-up inventory by way of a coast-to-coast telecommunications network. Our computerized system then finds it and gets it into his hands in a hurry. In most cases, in less than 24 hours.

Not only that, but of all parts orders received last year, we were able to fill 95.6% of them immediately.

A record seldom maintained by any other car maker—domestic or import.

It buys 1100 mechanics who aren't just trained, they're educated.

We put each and every one of our mechanics through one of the toughest factory training programs in the business: 14 courses. And then we send them back to school to study as many as 5 courses every year. (Each one of our technicians must enroll in at least one course.) Every year, each man faces a tough skill evaluation by one of our District Service Managers. What's more, we have a factory correspondence course for all mechanics. It even includes a written monthly test.

See your Toyota dealer soon.

For $2299, you get a lot more than just Canada's lowest priced popular small car.

You get Canada's No. 1 small car.

Homosexuals by Mail Order

DALLAS (UPI) — Dallas police said Wednesday they believed they had uncovered a nation-wide mail order homosexual procurement ring with the discovery of catalogued file containing as many as 100,000 names and booklets showing pictures and names of young "fellows" who were available to "sponsors."

Police Capt. Bennie Newman, who heads the department's youth division, said, "At this point, I don't think it has anything to do with what has been happening in Houston," where authorities have found the bodies of 27 victims of an alleged murder team.

However, among the items found in a raid on an apartment here were four photographs with the word "kill" printed in orange lettering on the tape binding the young men's pictures.

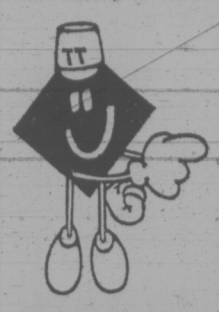

Newman said the meaning of the word would be thoroughly investigated, but it was pointed out that it merely could mean that the four no longer were "available." He said an attempt would be made to find the four to confirm their state of health.

Six persons, including the ring's alleged leader, were arrested in a raid on the apartment after a tip by a "panicky" 24-year-old member who feared police were closing in on the organization.

They were booked for investigation of felony conspiracy to commit sodomy and possession of narcotics after a quantity of marijuana was found in the apartment.

Literature seized in the apartment listed the Dallas address and name of "Epic International," and "The Odyssey Foundation," the latter with a San Diego post office box mail address.

The raiders said they almost filled a pickup truck with files, pornographic literature, a camera, photo-engraving equipment, stationery, an electric typewriter and hundreds of booklets with names and addresses.

17 Seek Chief's Job In Central Saanich

Applicants from Greater Victoria, Vancouver Island and the lower mainland are vying for the post of Central Saanich police chief.

Seventeen men are being considered, and "there are some highly qualified fellows among them," Mayor Archie Galbraith said today.

The appointment will be made early next month.

None of the applicants come from within the six-man municipal force.

Quest for a new chief follows recommendations of consultant Mervin Smith, chief of Delta police. He urged the post be filled immediately, along with the hiring of an additional patrol constable.

He also recommended a holding cell be built at the police building, a breath analysis machine be obtained and a civilian staff hired to maintain a 24-hour emergency communications system.

Most capital expenditure would be the responsibility of next year's council, Galbraith indicated. But he said some items might be added meanwhile, following appointment of the chief.

Acting chief is retired RCMP superintendent Gordon Gerrie, appointed following the resignation in May of John Gelling after personnel problems developed within the department.

Youths Died From Own Negligence

DUNCAN — Two Chemainus youths died July 11 on a B.C. Hydro transmission tower due to their own negligence, a coroner's jury ruled this week.

The jury named electrocution as the cause of death and attached no blame.

Barry James Cocks and Paul William Livingston, both 17, were standing on a crossbar of the tower 50 feet above the ground.

They died instantly when 80,000 volts of electricity arced from a power line above their heads and enveloped them in flames, the jolt hurling them to the ground.

A third youth, 17-year-old Dennis Dubinsky of Chemainus, escaped injury. Dubinsky testified at the inquest that youths often climb the tower, and the trio had climbed it on previous occasions.

CRASH DOESN'T FAZE PILOT

VANCOUVER (CP) — Capt. John Pew views his dramatic escape Sunday from a flaming jet at the Abbotsford, B.C., international air show with equanimity and can hardly wait to climb into an aircraft again.

"It was just one of those one-in-a-million things that just happened to me," he said in an interview from his bed at Vancouver General Hospital, "and it won't happen again for years and years I'm sure."

Capt. Pew, 26, of Brantford, Ont., said he'll be flying again as soon as they let him out of bed.

Capt. Pew, a pilot stationed at Canadian Forces Base Comox, was one of two crew members of an armed forces CF-101 Voodoo jet interceptor which exploded in midair at the show.

He and his navigator, Capt. Gary Raindahl, 24, of Trenton, Ont., parachuted to safety as flaming wreckage plummeted to the ground. Both were taken to hospital suffering third-degree burns.

Capt. Pew said the first indication of trouble came at about 10,000 feet when flames started shooting through the floorboards at the navigator's seat.

There was a "violent force throwing us all around the cockpit, probably from the explosion," he said.

The navigator ejected first.

"I had a little more trouble finding the handles to eject because of forces throwing me to the front of the aircraft.

"Fortunately, the aircraft must have tipped over and thrown me back on my seat, so that I was able to pull the (ejection) handles."

Flames now surrounded the cockpit "and I think I went through a fireball as I went out."

Capt. Pew said he had no idea what caused the explosion. Canadian forces officials are conducting an investigation.

The pilot, who has five years' flying experience, said his first reaction was one of frustration in being unable to operate the ejection mechanism.

"My second feeling was 'Well, it's finally happened to me'," he said. "You don't really believe it's ever going to happen to you—it's like car accidents."

He said there was no time to feel fear because it was all over in seconds.

The navigator ejected at 10,000 or 11,000 feet and Capt. Pew said he ejected at about 6,000 feet.

"I've never landed in a parachute before. It was surprisingly easy. I just hit the ground, undid the straps on my parachute and walked away to the road."

He said he had been performing in air shows on weekends in British Columbia and Alberta all summer and he hoped to continue performing.

"I'm in relatively good spirits," he said. "I've got some burns and I'll probably be in hospital three weeks to a month, but there's nothing that won't heal."

More Graves in Houston?

HOUSTON (UPI) — The Galveston County sheriff said today he plans to dig for more graves on a remote stretch of gulf coast beach where deputies discovered six of the 27 victims of a sex-torture ring.

"I don't expect to find any (bodies) but I think it is my responsibility to check the area more thoroughly," said Sheriff J. B. Kline.

He said the reputed mass killer, Dean Allen Corll, told two teen-aged assistants he had buried another body on the High Island beach. Elmer Wayne Henley, 17, and David Owen Brooks, 18, said they participated in the sex ring over three years.

The pair led officers to the burial grounds on the coast, in an east Texas forest and in a Houston boat shed.

Lawyers for Henley were to go to court today to battle a state attempt to force a psychiatric examination of the youth.

Charles Melder, a defence lawyer, blocked an examination Tuesday but said Henley, 17, probably would be in court for today's hearing.

Nine Youths Selected For JA National Meet

Nine Greater Victoria youths have been selected to attend a week-long Junior Achievement conference in Ottawa next week.

Sean Walsh, 1242 Richardson, said the national conference will give delegates a better understanding of business ranging from formation of a corporation to the best selling methods.

Walsh, 14, was selected to attend for his work with the T-Jays company of Victoria.

The company was named company of the year out of 10 firms formed by high school students in Greater Victoria. The T-Jays made a profit of more than $200 on their original investment of $50. The company produced stationery with a lamp post and hanging flower basket embossed on one corner.

Other Junior Achievers chosen to attend the conference which begins Monday are Laura Porcher, Penny Rainsford, Cindy Mojocha, Rod Forbes, Allan Woodskye, Doug Benton, Maisie Mah and Ann John.

Island Lawyer Named Judge

The provincial government has appointed Anthony Sarich, a Campbell River barrister, a judge of the provincial court for that area.

The appointment was contained in cabinet orders-in-council released Wednesday.

Sarich's appointment is effective Sept. 1.

Counter-Attack Planned In Upsurge of Drownings

A substantial increase in the number of drownings in the province is worrying Recreation and Conservation Minister Jack Radford.

Radford said Wednesday there have been 68 drownings in the first six months of this year, compared to 56 in the same period last year.

"It's tragic and it's frustrating," Radford said in a press release. "And I intend to involve myself and my department somehow in trying to reduce the numbers of people who lose their lives when they have set out to enjoy the outdoors of British Columbia."

Radford said education and enforcement procedures could be improved to prevent drownings and outdoor accidents.

S. American Indian Outlook Is Poor

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) — South America's 14 million native Indians are at the bottom of the social and economic totem pole. The outlook for any improvement in their situation is poor.

Before the arrival of Columbus, nearly 500 years ago, Indians controlled South America from the tropical Caribbean shore to the cold Patagonian desert. Today, Indians make up just seven per cent of South America's population.

In some places persecution of Indians is so ruthless that scientists say they are victims of genocide — extermination of an entire race.

Peru, the centre of the ancient Inca empire, has the most Indians left: 6.3 million out of its total current population of 14 million. Desperately poor, undernourished and uneducated, most Peruvian Indians tend llama herds or farm in the frozen reaches of the Andes Mountains.

The military regime which took over Peru in 1968, however, has expropriated more than 12 million acres of farmland and 1.7 million head of livestock from private owners and turned it over to Indian peasant co-operatives.

The government also wants to teach the Indians how to read and write. A major problem is that most Pruvian Indians speak Quechua, a native tribal language, instead of Spanish.

Bolivia, with three million Indians among its five million inhabitants, has Peru's problems — only worse. Most Bolivian Indians die before their first birthday. The ones that survive childhood can't expect to live much past 40.

Ecuador has about 2.1 million Indians in a total population of six million. They are still looked down on as "Indios," despite high-sounding promises by that tiny country's military government to make life better for Indians.

When a Roman Catholic bishop in the Andean province of Riobamba recently distributed church-owned lands to Indians, there was such a stir that Pope Paul had to send a special emissary to investigate.

A big new oil strike in Ecuador may, indirectly, help the Indians. The government, which granted drilling concessions in the Amazon jungle to foreign companies, expects to take in an extra $120 million a year because of oil. It says it will spend the money to improve education, agriculture and electrification.

Democratically elected Marxist President Salvador Allende of Chile has promised better days ahead for his country's 500,000 Mapuche Indians, who make up five per cent of the Chilean population.

He has provided more federal funds for Indian affairs, sent government doctors and dentists into Indian communities and given Indians land under a agrarian reform program.

Mapuches are the descendants of the fierce Araucanian Indians said to be the one tribe in South America the Spanish conquistadores couldn't conquer. They killed Spanish pioneer Pedro de Valdivia in 1554 — one legend says by forcing him to drink molten gold — and it wasn't until 1883 that whites finally settled the area around Temudo.

Paraguay, a largely undeveloped jungle country in the middle of South America, has a unique Indian makeup. Almost all of its two million people are descendants in some degree of the original Guarani Indian natives. Both Guarani and Spanish are official languages in Paraguay, and many white-looking Paraguayans speak the two interchangeable.

Brazil's 180,000 Indians have been in the headlines frequently, because of the extremely primitive state in which they live and because of isolated bloody clashes between them and whites.

The Brazilian government wants to "progressively integrate" Indians into modern society "but without the loss of their cultural standards," says Interior Minister Jose Costa Cavalcanit, the man in charge of Indian policy.

Brazil's Indians inspire passion among scientists and writers because most of them are absolutely primitive — they paint their bodies with berry juice and put wooden discs in their lips and bones through their nosé — yet live just a few hours' flying time from modern, skyscraper-filled cities.

GIRL'S 'HOME' WAS AN AIRPORT BENCH

PARIS (UPI) — Britain "for humanitarian reasons" offered admittance Thursday to Nadya Thabane, the 17-year-old Ugandan girl without a country who has been sleeping on a bench in the Orly Airport transit lounge because no country would accept her.

Nadya, born in Uganda, was sent by her parents to Pakistan because they thought she would have a better life among her fellow followers of the Ismaelite religion than in Uganda, which has expelled many Asians.

Pakistan refused Nadya entry and sent her to England. British authorities refused her entry and returned her to Pakistan. This time Pakistan sent her to France.

French authorities also rejected her and tried to arrange for her return to Uganda. They found out her parents has been shot by a firing squad because they sent the child abroad, Orly officials said.

Meanwhile, Air France hostesses were paying for Nadya's meals because she ran out of money. And her Uganda passport expired today.

At the last minute, Britain, "for humanitarian reasons" accepted the girl, Orly airport officials said. With smiles, Nadya, in her simple white dress and black sweater, accepted a free ticket to leave for London. She said she thinks she has an uncle in England.

She still does not know her parents were executed, airport officials said.

Windmill Power Urged

MONTPELIER, VT. (UPI) —Prof. William Heronemus of the University of Massachusetts Wednesday called for a network of ultra-modern windmills to take the place of nuclear energy as the power source of the future.

Speaking at a meeting of a regional study group, he said windmills "technically more advanced than Skylab" could be harnessed to capture up to 70 per cent of the wind's energy and produce more than twice the 15 billion kilowatt hours that will needed in Vermont by 1990.

He said it would take 957 windmills 370 feet in height to meet the state's estimated needs.

Another idea, he said, would be to let the oceans act as "natural collectors" for solar energy. The stored heat could be suitable for generating all of the nation's electricity, he said.

"If we have suffered from anything in the last 15 years, we have put too many eggs in one basket," he said, urging a lessening of the concentration on nuclear energy as the power source for the future.

At an earlier session of the electrical energy study committee, an executive of the New England Power Pool called for an increase in the region's nuclear power generating capacity.

No End To Rising Prices

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The American consumer faces the prospect of continuing rising prices for everything from food to toasters, refrigerators and automobiles.

The cost of living council (CLC) said today that 68 corporations, each with annual sales of more than $100 million, have notified it of planned price increases. If the council does not challenge the increases within 30 days, the companies may put the higher prices into effect.

More expensive steel can only mean higher costs for manufactured goods, two major firms indicated Wednesday. Food prices have been rising steadily and the end is not in sight.

State Dept. Trust Doubted in Congress

WASHINGTON (CP) — The chairman of a congressional subcommittee has questioned whether Congress can rely on the state department for objective information following allegations that the department deliberately distorted Canadian reports affecting the proposed Alaska oil pipeline.

Congressman John Melcher (Dem.—Mont.) was questioning Julius Katz, a deputy assistant secretary of state, before the House subcommittee on public lands.

Katz, however, denied the department deliberately withheld information that might have weakened the case for approval of the Alaskan oil route.

He said delay in providing Congress with the Canadian government's position on an alternate Canadian route was caused by initial confusion on Canada's position and a "bureaucratic goof" during transmission of the clarified Canadian report.

Melcher suggested that since the administration favored the $3.5-billion trans-Alaska route, the department had been "put on the spot" by requests by the house of Representatives and the Senate for "unbiased information" on the Canadian position.

Katz replied: "I don't consider this was being put on the spot."

Questioning touched on the fact that a Canadian policy statement delivered to the U.S. embassy in Ottawa and forwarded to the state department differed in one paragraph from a similar statement delivered by the Canadian government to its embassy here.

Melcher insisted this discrepancy should have been made known to Congress July 7 along with the full report and that state should not have waited until it got the official word from Ottawa.

He said that "failure to provide that paragraph put the state department in the position of perhaps being overzealous in supporting its own position" in favor of the Alaska route.

Drivers Let Tot Die

ROCK SPRINGS, Wyo. (UPI) — A travelling carnival worker said his 4-year-old daughter died Thursday because motorists refused to become involved in the plight of a family injured in an early morning car accident.

Edward Wood, on his way home to Hayward, Calif., said both his children died during the current summer tour of the carnival. His one-month-old son died accidentally in his crib in May.

But Wood was bitter about the death of his 4-year-old daughter, Louise Boyer.

His story began in the early morning hours on a highway west of Green River, Wyo., where some people stopped but would not help. Wood fell asleep at the wheel of his car and wrecked it when he awoke and tried to get it back on the road.

Wood said he flagged one passing motorist and asked him to stop somewhere and call for help. "Yeah" was the only reply.

He said another man, in a "U.S. government car," would not allow his wife and injured daughter in the automobile.

"I don't touch the child," Wood quoted the man as saying.

"My wife said, 'We're not asking you to pick her up. I'll pick her up and put her in the car.'"

Wood said the man replied, "No, ma'am, I won't put her in my car," and he drove off.

By the time Wood managed to stop another car, the girl had stopped breathing. She was pronounced dead on arrival at a hospital, 30 minutes after the accident.

"People take something like this as a show and too few care to get involved," Wood said. "If I could have gotten help sooner than I did, the baby might still be alive, in the hospital, but alive."

With lighted flares, Wood said passing motorists could see what the situation was.

"People could see her and my wife on the pavement. She was still alive and all I could find out was she had a broken jaw at the time and was in a very bad state of shock," Wood said.

Wood, 28, left the carnival Tuesday to return home. "Carnivals have taken too much from me this year," he said.

Killer Disease End In Sight

LONDON (FWF) — The killer desease of bilharziasis, which often follows large-scale irrigation projects, has replaced malaria as the worst public health problem of the tropics. But two simultaneous research breakthroughs, achieved by scientists in Africa and Britian, now offer a real hope of curbing the disease.

The disease is caused by bilharzia — a tiny parasite that lives only in certain snails, water and man. It is spreading rapidly in tropical and sub-tropical Africa, East Asia, the Caribbean islands and Latin America. The number of its victims is estimated in hundreds of million.s The disease is slow, taking many years to kill its victims and producing, meanwhile, perpetual lethargy.

AREA SPREADS

Paradoxically, the spread of modern irrigation systems has extended the breeding grounds of the snails and also the disease area. Treatment is slow and cumbersome and there are no immunizing drugs as yet. However, scientists at the Haile Selassie University in Ethiopia have devoped a product to keep down the snail population and their colleagues in Britain are now developing an immunizing vaccine for the fist time.

The African solution to curbing the disease is almost a poetic one as the shrub whose poisonous fruit will be used to exterminate the snails happens to grow on the shores of many bilharzia-affected waters. And the British achievement amounts to a brilliant piece of scientific detective work preventing the parasite from evading the body's natural immune reaction by disguising itself as a body tissue.

The two discoveries are likely to have considerable effect on economic developments as well as public health — as the disease often attacks the very category of workers whose perforance affects the well being of large populations.

MAN-MADE PROBLEM

Dr. Akliu Lemma, Director of the Institute of Pathobiology at the Addis Ababa University — personally responsible for the African research breakthrough — describes the spread of bilharziasis as 'typically man-made.''

The snails are responsible for an epidemic at Lake Volta, Africa's largest artificial lake, and breed in the canals dug to irrigate agricultural projects across the continent: people drink from, bath and work in these canals. In the Egyptian province of Aswan, for example, the incidence of bilharziasis increased 10-fold within three years — from the introduction of perennial irrigation.

Thousands of sophisticated and powerful chemical compounds have been tested for killing the snails (and with them the disease) but they have proved either too expensive for application on a wide scale o rharmful to fish which provide an important local source of high-quality food.

Lemma relates the discovery of the ideal, natural product derived from the poisonous fruit of endod, a wild soapberry plant, in a paper published by UN organization. It was afo rtunate discovery.

WORLDWIDE TESTS

The African scientist initiated and directed a worldwide series of tests using the berries of endod, leading to the purification of the poison and increasing its potency more than 10-fold. Lemma himself has paid extended visits to North America where he carried on the work and engaged the support of the Stanford Research Institute and Harvard University.

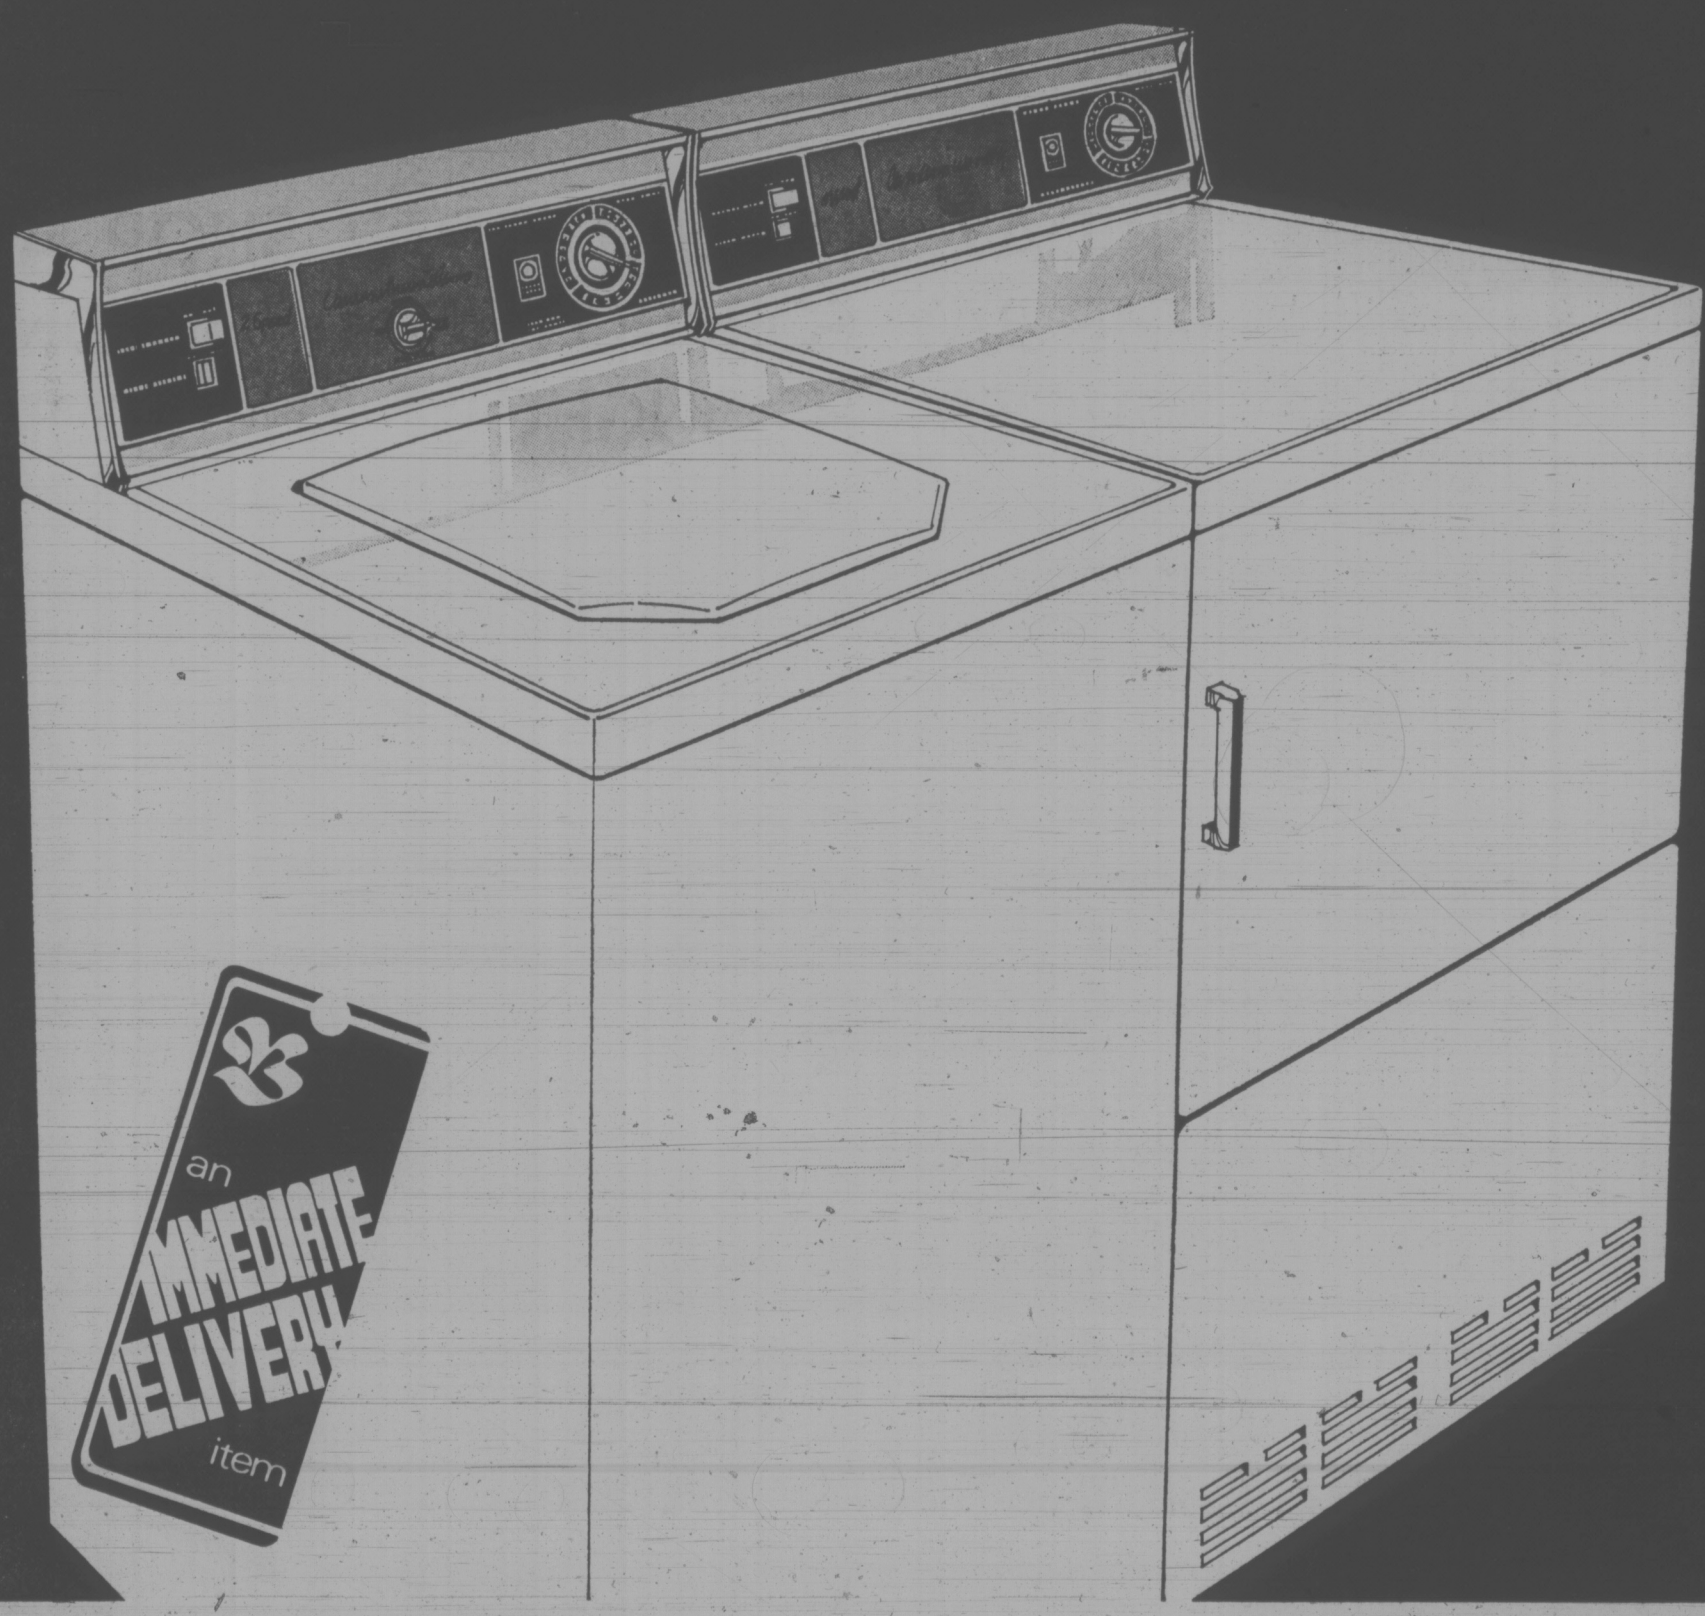

Meanwhile, scientists at Britains' Medical Research Council have solved the central mystery of biharziasis — the cause of the human body's faillure to show immune reaction to any sort of invading parasite. The reason: The body is "fooled" by the parasite through its capacity to disguise itself as a body tissue. The hide-and-seek of the parasite against the body's natural ability to defend itself is done by capturing sugar molecules from the blood and using them as a "cloak."

Research workers have found that mice artificially infected with the bilharzia parastie produce no antibodies either. But when the same parasites are then transferred to monkeys, they are killed—presumably before they manage to change their disguise from mouse to monkey. Further experiments show that the parasites change their form after penetrating the skin. If they do not go through this process, they cannot grow. But when they do, they become vulnerable for a time.

25-Cent Robber Jailed

EDMONTON (CP) — Robert Joseph Vaillancourt, who used violence to rob a 67-year-old man but succeeded in netting only 25 cents, was sentenced Wednesday to one year less 12 days in jail.

In sentencing Vaillancourt, of no fixed address, provincial judge John Coughlan said he was aware the sum involved was only 25 cents.

But "the point is you made the demand and used violence."

"I abhor violence on the part of anyone, whether it's by a civilian or police officer," the judge added. "Violence has no place in our society."

Vaillancourt stopped his victim on the street with a demand for money. Vaillancourt struck the elderly man in the face and reached into his pocket.

The man, who said he needed his money for groceries, gave Vaillancourt 25 cents but was struck again as the assailant reached for the man's wallet. By this time, the man had called for help.

★

REDWATER (CP) — Calgary Power crews restored full service Wednesday night to this town 35 miles northeast of Edmonton and surrounding rural areas following a violent lightning storm that knocked out power Tuesday night.

★

WINNIPEG (CP) — Two men who escaped from British Columbia Penitentiary Aug. 11 are behind bars again.

Donald Raymond Gray, 35 and George Gallicon, 45, pleaded guilty to car theft following their arrest in Ontario while driving a car reported stolen from a Winnipeg garage.

Gray, serving five years when he escaped, was sentenced to one year concurrent while Gallichon, designated a habitual criminal and serving eight years was given a two-year consecutive term.

★

RED DEER (CP) — Dr. M. W. Stone, head of Alberta's herd animal health division, expressed concern Wednesday over the possibility of an outbreak of brucellosis in the province's cattle.

In a telephone interview from Edmonton, Stone said none of the several hundred animals tested for the disease between 1963 and 1970 reacted positively.

However, one positive test appeared in 1971 and 11 more have appeared this year, he noted.

CALGARY (CP) — Dr. M. M. Cantor, Alberta's chief coroner, said he is preparing a new Coroners Act giving coroners wider powers to call inquests.

A major change would be to require inquests be called "within a reasonable time," perhaps six weeks to two months so that evidence can be obtained from those involved while details are still fresh in their mind, he said.

TEAM SPRAYED TO WIN

HIGH LEVEL, Alta. (CP) — A team of forest fire fighters from Fort Vermilion dug, chopped and sprayed its way to victory Wednesday in the first annual native fire crew competition.

Fort Vermilion defeated teams from Meander River and Rainbow, all in the Footner Lake forest region in northwestern Alberta.

After the competition of digging trenches to halt make-believe fires, felling trees along the fire line and setting up pumps to quench simulated "hot-spots," the Vermilion and Meander teams were tied.

In the runoff, the Vermilion team completed a fire trench —chopping trees and digging earth—along a 100-foot perimeter in 13 minutes, 25 seconds which was four minutes, 25 seconds faster than Meander.

S. African Ruling Party as Strong as Ever

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — South Africa's ruling Nationalist party has reached the quarter-century mark, apparently more firmly entrenched than it was when it launched an era of white supremacy in 1948.

The Nationalists won by a slim margin over Prime Minister Jan Christiaan Smuts in 1948. Their victory was attributed in large measure to a campaign which pointed up the "swart gevaar" of black peril.

"The fate of our children and their descendants and possibly our own generation is in our hands," Daniel F. Malan, the first Nationalist prime minister, warned.

From 1948 on, race separation which had a long unofficial history in South Africa, was extended and rigidly enforced by legislation.

A proposal by the defeated Smuts government to provide representation for the country's half a million Indians was junked. And when appeal courts rejected some Nationalist moves, Parliament was convened as a High Court. Efforts were launched to remove colored or mulatto voters from the common voting rolls. The country's two million coloreds were, instead, granted four white representatives in Parliament in 1956, but they were abolished in 1968. In 1960, the three parliamentarians designated to represent blacks were eliminated.

Malan was succeeded as prime minister in 1954 by Johannes G. Strijdom who said "We shall only be able to remain a happy country and people if everybody is prepared to contribute his share toward fostering a spirit of benevolence between the various racial groups."

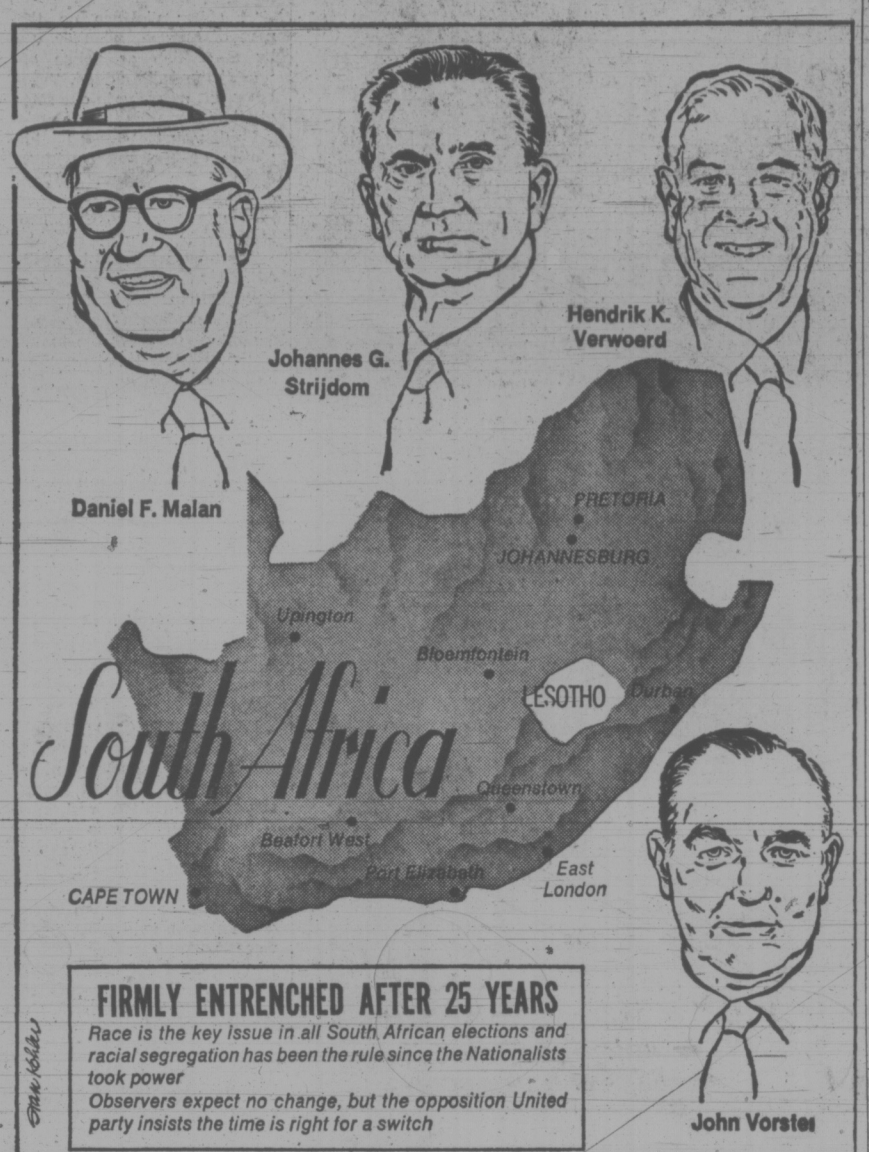

Racial tensions grew in 1960 and in March of that year, 69 blacks were shot by police at Sharpville.

The next prime minister, Hendrik K. Verwoerd called on whites to "stand together, regardless of what happens in the world outside South Africa." Verwoerd was assassinated in 1966.

The present prime minister, John Vorster, has said that the eight black reservations or "homelands" may become completely independent of South Africa if they choose.

Black leaders are demanding that the Nationalists keep this promise.

Another general election must be held by 1975. The opposition United party led by Sir de Villers Graff insists that the time is right for a change, but political observers believe chances of defeating the Nationalists are remote.

FIRMLY ENTRENCHED AFTER 25 YEARS

Race is the key issue in all South African elections and racial segregation has been the rule since the Nationalists took power

Observers expect no change, but the opposition United party insists the time is right for a switch

Indian Foster Child Caseload on the Rise

THIRD SECTION family

By ANN DUNSMUIR
Times Staff

For many native Indian children the crunch comes early in life.

They stand a much higher chance of ending up in foster homes than the average middle class non-Indian child. And in most cases their foster parents will be Caucasians with a different culture and life style.

The increasing number of native Indian children coming into care led to a conference of concerned social workers, Indians and foster parents Tuesday at the department of human resources office on Fort Street.

The number of Indian children placed in group or foster homes has risen by more than two per cent in the past eight months although the total number of children in care has decreased.

Social Worker Bernice Packford said the increase indicates the failure of Canadian institutions to meet the needs of Indian people.

Group members were unanimous in blaming the school system, poor housing, lack of opportunities for work on reserves and lack of sufficient, long-term financial support for the breakdown of Indian family groups.

Packford said the increase in Indian children in care was caused by the increased numbers of native families moving from West Coast reserves to cities in search of jobs and education for their children.

John Albany, chief of the Songhees band, said the federal government should give Indian bands enough capital to finance industries on the reserves and stop the drift to the cities.

Judy Robertson, a native welfare aid, said there are no opportunities for Indians on the reserves except for hunting and fishing.

"We have always been called lazy," she said, "but there are no jobs for Indians on the reserves."

Robertson said money spent on foreign aid would be better spent at home. Indians have no job, no decent housing, and no education, she said. Their children grow up to repeat the cycle.

"Canada gives millions to India and Africa but not to us — we're just a bunch of bums."

Unfortunately the move to the city often results in disappointment. The parents have no education and can't find jobs and the children cannot cope with the school system.

The family faces a constant hassle with welfare, landlords, utility companies and teachers.

Dennis Alphonse, executive director of the Indian Friendship Centre, said these conditions lead to discouragement and apathy. Parents stop caring what happens to their families and their children end up in care, he said.

And a great many are placed in white foster homes where they lose contact with Indian culture. Alphonse would like to see more Indian foster and group homes as "a stop gap measure" until the causes of family break-ups are solved.

Indian relatives or friends willing to take the children stand to lose out financially. They receive welfare payments of $25 to $30 for each child compared to the $60 to $90 a month paid for foster children.

This is because children placed with relatives are usually not made wards of the department and don't qualify as foster children.

"With the cost of living spiralling it's a real hardship to look after a relative's children without adequate financial help," Alphonse said.

Mrs. Odelia Joe, a teacher of Indian crafts, cares for three young relatives — only one is an official foster child. She receives $60 a month for the foster child and $30 each in welfare money for the other two.

Conference members agreed that Indians have trouble relating to the white institutions designed to assist them and are often too proud to ask white people for help.

And when they do the results can be discouraging. "The white counsellors in the schools push all the Indian kids into the vocational courses," Robertson said.

The group would like the province to fund programs at the Indian Friendship Centres. At present the federal government pays for the centres' administration but money for programs must be raised independently.

Alphonse said that with a steady income the centre could provide detached youth workers and native counsellors to deal with problems before the situation reached the point where children have to be taken into care.

The provincial association of friendship centres plans to petition Human Resources Minister Norman Levi for funds for programs to help Indians preserve their culture and adjust to white society.

Adjustment to city life is an even bigger challenge

Help Works Best Before Marriage

By LON WOOD
Times Staff

Reconciliation provisions in Canada's Divorce Act are not working well and it appears pre-marital counselling and family life education in schools would be of greater value, says a report of the Vanier Institute of the Family.

The report, released this week, stems from a seminar held earlier this year by the institute and the federal health department. The meet was designed to study impact and implications of reconciliation provisions made in revisions to the Divorce Act five years ago.

The act introduced new parties (counsellors) who were to be ready to help husband and wife become reconciled, but the Ottawa seminar aired investigations indicating that very few meaningful attempts have been made by couples to reconcile through counselling.

The seminar report states that the present reconciliation feature of the Divorce Act is no more than "a piece of political window dressing which mollifies those who cannot quite accept the marriage-breakdown theory."

"By the time a petition for divorce is filed, not much can be done by counselling," says the report.

Participants expressed the idea that it is impractical to impose compulsory counselling and stated that counselling needs should be shifted much farther back in the history of the individual.

"Pre-marital counselling and family life educatin in the school system may be of much greater value and such programs need to be re-assessed and mawde more effective," the report states.

An overall implication of findings was to make divorce less a legal than a social question.

"The task (divorce) requires the co-operation of lawyers and social workers but it is often lacking," says the report. "Lawyers and social workers approach their tasks with very different assumptions about how divorce should be handled.

"The lawyer represents one client only, and acts solely in his interest at the expense of others. To the counsellor furnishing information to one spouse for use against the other is unthinkable.

"The lawyer's viewpoint demands that prejudicial information be used against the other spouse. The counsellor uses a case method to bring spouses together; the lawyer is an adversary system which forces them apart."

Brand X Store Opens

TORONTO (CP) — While food prices are soaring all around it, a tiny east-end store here is offering "food for the classes at prices for the masses."

It's called Usher's Other Place and it claims to offer about the best deals in town on little-known brands of food, especially canned varieties.

A 28-ounce can of pork and beans sold here Saturday for 25 cents while a brand name can sold for 45 cents at a supermarket.

Other items included spinach at 10 cents for a 14-ounce tin, cream of mushroom soup at 10 cents for 10 ounces, cucumbers at two for 15 cents and creamed corn at 15 cents for a 19-ounce can.

Meanwhile, a Loblaws supermarket special had a brand name corn going at 20 cents for a 100-ounce can.

"I couldn't afford to shop in the big stores," said Marjorie McLean, picking up 24-ounce loaves of white bread at two for 33 cents. "I just go in there, get sick from the prices and walk out."

A similar loaf of bread sells for 28 cents in major supermarkets.

Usher's, which has a second store in west-end Toronto, is open only three days a week — Thursday, Friday and Saturday. It uses little advertising, depending mostly on word-of-mouth to get its name known.

Dave Usher, president of Usher's, said politicians must accept some of the blame for rising food prices with their continuous debate on price controls.

Talk of a freeze on prices only drives producers to raise their prices, he said.

Campbell Laps Up Quaint Old Tureens

LONDON (UPI) — When some future social scientist compiles a history of status symbols through the ages, he would do well to pause a while over soup tureens.

Of all the peculiar ways people have found to keep ahead of the Jones', glorification of a humble soup-serving bowl is among the strangest. But for a while in the 18th century an ostentatiously valuable or garishly bizarre soup tureen was a status symbol of the first rank.

From now until Sept. 9 London's Victoria and Albert Museum is proving the point with part of the Campbell Soup Co.'s astonishing collection of soup tureens.

There are tureens shaped like rabbits, or chickens, or cabbages with a frog on top, or a boar's head with thrusting tusks. There are silver tureens by the most famous silversmiths of their time and an earthenware one from Portugal shaped like a wooden barrel filled with fish.

Most of these great covered bowls originally had matching trays, many of which have been lost or broken in two centuries of uncaring use. But the Campbell Company viewed tureens alone as objects dear to its corporate heart and collected them in several years of scouring Europe and the United States.

There are porcelain tureens from China and Chelsea, from Meissen and Montpellier. There are pewter tureens and Mexican silver tureens and Swedish faience tureens until the eye swims and the mind boggles.

Naturally the soup company had to build something to house such acquisitions as the ship-shaped silver tureen made for Russia's Catherine the Great. Its Campbell museum has been open in Camden, N.J., for just over three years.

Everything in it has to do with soup — soup plates, soup ladles, soup spoons and above all, tureens. This is the first time items from it have been shown in Europe, where many of them were first made.

Most of the collection's tureens were made in the 18th century.

"Formal dining at that time," says Campbell president William Parker in a catalogue to the museum collection, "was conducted on a grand scale and with an elegance that is unmatched in history."

Elegance is easy to see in the graceful silver tureens by such English silversmiths as Paul Storr, Paul de Lamerie or Robert Garrard. The grand scale shows even in the most extreme designs.

And many of them are. There are only so many ways to design a plate, but a soup tureen's bulky size is ideal for ostentation or experiment, and designers ran riot over these bowls.

"They ran the gamut from ship to fish, fowl to animals, vegetables and fruits to flowers," an exhibition spokesman said.

"They were not all appetizing," he said. "But they were often surprising, if not startling, and certainly not dull."

A Novice Canoeist Tells All

JELLY SIDE DOWN
nancy stahl

There are few more perfect examples of poetry in motion than the sight of two experienced canoers gently cleaving the water with a natural cadence matched only by the rhythmic movement of the waves themselves.

And there are few more ridiculous sights than two novice canoers sobbing and bashing the water ineffectually with their paddles as they try to stop the rhythmic movement of the waves from turning the canoe around for the eighteenth time.

The first time that we rented a canoe, my husband, who outweighs me by one hundred pounds, directed me to the stern, appropriating the bow seat for himself. By the time we were 10 feet from the dock, the waves threatened to swamp the bow, while the stern rose to such a giddy height that my paddle could barely reach the water.

Unfortunately, getting into a canoe is like putting on a girdle. Once you are completely in, there is no possibility of swapping front to back position; you must simply live with your uncomfortable error until you have an opportunity to get out of it and begin all over again. Luckily, we accomplished this by running aground on a sand bar.

I soon discovered that whoever sits in the bow never knows whether the person in the stern is actually paddling or simply lying down with his toes in the water. If the bowman attempts to peer over his shoulder, the ensuing motion causes the canoe to begin lurching from side to side and the camera falls overboard.

Paddling a canoe is a lot like patting your head while you rub your stomach. It is not only a great deal more difficult than it looks, but it must be done in unison. Regrettably, that "natural cadence" still eludes us; canoewise, my husband is invariably patting while I'm rubbing.

Marian Rozanski, my next door neighbor, gave me the first one.

BUTTER BEANS WITH CRUMB BUTTER

Cook one quart cut up yellow butter beans in a minimum of salted, boiling water until barely tender. Drain. Melt ¼ cup butter until it is lightly tinged with gold. Add 2 or 3 tablespoons soft white breadcrumbs and stir until they are soaked and slightly crispened. Spoon over hot yellow beans and serve.

WYN'S SQUASH AND CARROTS

Select very young yellow crookneck squash or zucchinis. Wash but do not peel. Select large carrots. Slice EQUAL amounts of each WAFER thin. Cook in minimum of boiling salted water until barely tender. Drain. Turn into preheated serving dish and dot with butter and sprinkle with salt. Beautiful.

SPINACH and MUSHROOMS

2 cello pkg. spinach
One 10-oz. can mushroom stems and pieces
1½ tbsp. butter
1½ tbsp. cornstarch
¼ to ½ tsp. salt.

Wash spinach thoroughly. Drain well. In large kettle cook covered in water clinging to leaves, turning spinach over as soon as bottom leaves wilt. Cook until barely tender. Drain well in colander and chop coarsely. Return to pot. In a saucepan stir and heat together to blend the butter, cornstarch, salt. Stir in mushrooms and liquid until thickened. Stir into spinach and heat through.

STUFFED ONIONS

Select 6 large (at least 3-inch) ordinary cooking or white onions. Peel and cook until ¾ tender in boiling salted water (about 25 minutes). Drain. Cool enough to handle. With sharp pointed knife remove 1-inch diameter core from each. Chop HALF of the cores. (Use remainder for soup.) To chopped cores add 5 tablespoons shredded cheese, 1½ tablespoons melted butter, 1 tablespoons catsup and ½ teaspoon salt. Stuff into cavities in onions. Stand in well buttered baking dish, touching, and bake 30 to 40 minutes. Do not bake too long or they become too tender and droop. If desired these onions may be topped with buttered crumbs and returned to oven for 5 or 10 minutes. Especially good with roast beef.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22—Jan. 19): Find new ways. Old procedures cause delay, embarrassment. Family member will be co-operative. Know it and get going. There could be legal roadblock. However, creative resources are available and you win.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20—Feb. 18): Hold off on trips, if possible. Check reservations, appointments and messages. Relative chooses this time to be argumentative. Rise above the petty. Don't give in to temptation to take "easy way." Ideas require time to develop.

You draw to you persons born under Cancer and Capricorn. This month, August, should be one of the most significant for you in 1973.

He Who Tips Cook In No Way Cheap

DEAR ABBY: I am a middle-aged woman who is presently dating a man a few years older than I am. He is loaded with money and takes me to all the finest places. He has a fine automobile, dresses expensively and beautifully, and is very good-looking. He sounds perfect, doesn't he? Well, he would be, except for one fault. He hates to tip. And I mean he absolutely will not tip anyone a dime for anything unless that person has performed a special service other than what he is being paid to do.

For example: We will go to a restaurant and if this gentleman thinks the food is exceptionally good he will send a $5 bill to the cook. (He says: "Why tip the waiter? He just serves it. The cook deserves the tip.") He will tip a waiter only if the waiter gives him extra special service.

Doormen get nothing. ("I can open the door myself," he says.) Captains get nothing. ("He's supposed to show us to our table.") Parking attendants get nothing.

This man claims he is not cheap — just sensible. Do you think he's "sensible" or cheap? — Embarrassed.

DEAR EMBARRASSED: Any man who tips the cook for excellence cannot be considered "cheap." (Too few even think of it.) However, he should realize that many people who perform services depend upon their tips for their bread and butter. I know it shouldn't be that way, but, unfortunately, that's the way it is.

DEAR ABBY: I am 5 foot 7 (stocking feet), 20 years old, and am told I have a very beautiful face and figure. My boy friend, who I am beginning to love dearly, is 5 foot 6. David is very handsome, but on the stocky side.

I find that the difference in our height bothers me. I am very uncomfortable when he and I are out together, and I keep hoping we won't run into people we know. When we do, I imagine they are thinking: "My goodness, SHE is taller than he is!" I realize that a man's height shouldn't be all that important, but I am torn apart worrying about what people think and say about it.

I'm beginning to think it just won't work out between David and me. I'm so afraid if I marry him I will always think maybe I should have waited for a taller man. — Torn.

DEAR TORN: If the one-inch difference in height is such a serious source of concern to you now, you'd be wise to look for a taller fellow. You say a man's height shouldn't be THAT important, but face it, to you it IS!

CONFIDENTIAL To "Young philosopher": No one said it better than Horace Greeley when he said, "Fame is a vapor, popularity an accident, riches take wings. Only one thing endures, and that is character."

Move Into Suburbs Good News to Tick

WASHINGTON (WP) — The poor tick: It can't run very fast. It can't hop or jump. To find a square meal—somebody else's blood—it must sit and wait for something to come in its path: A deer, a dog, maybe a human.

But the tick can afford to wait. When it does eat, the meal is a momentous occasion. The tick only eats three times in its lifetime: Passing from larval to nymph stage, to adulthood, to sexual maturity. There is no snacking between meals. But the tick doesn't seem to mind. It can survive 18 months or two years without one drop of blood.

Even so, few ticks find their vital three meals. Of the 5,000 to 7,000 ticks hatched by one female, all but 50 or 75 will probably starve to death at one stage or another.

But enough ticks survive to create health problems, for humans and animals. Ticks can carry rocky mountain spotted fever, a disease that has been striking people in the east with increasing frequency in the past decade.

Victims of Rocky Mountain spotted fever suffer rashes on their ankles and wrists, headache, backache, tiredness and low-grade fever. The disease is rarely fatal, though an autopsy of a 50-year-old male who died this summer in the U.S. "suggests" that the disease was the cause of death, according to the Fairfax County, Va., health department.

Ticks are becoming a greater health problem as the suburbs push farther out in wooded areas, where the eight-legged creatures do most of their waiting.

Mary Keith Garrett, a graduate student at the old Dominion University in Norfolk, is, you might say, "the tick lady." She catches them, studies them, writes about them and, with great regularity, picks them off her body. If Garrett has a tick on her, anywhere, she knows it. "After you've picked 17 ticks off," she said, "you can feel the 18th pretty easily."

Garrett finds her ticks—and they find her—in the great dismal swamp, the huge peat-bog forest on the Virginia-North Carolina border. Her home and laboratory (with another graduate student, Pat Gammon, who is researching slime molds) are an old tin-roofed tenant farmer's shack on the edge of the swamp.

Garrett can tell you a lot about the tick:

—After it burrows into the skin of its host, it secretes a fluid that prevents the blood from coagulating.

—It gets hungrier this time of year, as the days get shorter, because it responds to lower light levels. It also responds to movement, vibrations, heat and carbon dioxide emitted by humans and animals as they breathe.

—The mother tick, after laying her thousands of eggs, polishes them, one by one, with a wax to keep out moisture. The job takes 10 or 12 days, 24 hours a day.

Garrett has some scary speculations about the tick. What would happen, she asks, if more diseases learn to use the tick as a carrier? The tick, she points out, is relatively recent evolutionary arrival. Only a few diseases have learned how to get a free ride inside the tick, among them Rocky Mountain spotted fever.

The possibilities, said Garrett, are "truly frightening." The tick could become the scourge the flea was in the Middle Ages in Europe, when bubonic plague wiped out large segments of the population.

Not every tick carries a disease. Even an infected mother only passes on disease to as little as 2 per cent of her offspring. A further check on the spread of disease is the precarious future the tick faces as it passes from life stage to stage. Other checks are provided by drugs and other medical help.

When a tick gets on a human, it tends to move toward pressure points—the ankles, the waist, under the arms. It also likes the head, where hair provides a low light level as well as cover.

Removing a tick requires care. It burrows its head under the skin and then secretes a glue around its mouth for more anchorage. "He's built to stay there," says Garrett.

Everybody seems to have his own favorite way of removing ticks. Dab them with alcohol, lighter fluid or vaseline, are some of the suggestions. There are others, more questionable.

"I've watched people, unfortunately, light a cigarette and try to burn the tick out," said Garrett. "This serves primarily to burn the individual more than it does to remove the tick."

The best way, she says, is to apply gentle but steady pressure. Don't use jerky movements because the tick's mouth parts are well embedded. And don't get too queasy if your skin seems to lift up as you remove the tick, she says. Much of what looks like flesh is actually glue the tick has secreted.

The tick is easy to identify. Like the spider, it has eight legs. Members of the insect family have six legs.

Hikers and other people who enter wooded areas are almost certain to walk in the path of ticks, most of them waiting for one of their three essential meals. If you emit carbon dioxide and heat, as humans are wont to do, a waiting tick is going to get excited.

There are a few deterrents—primarily light clothing and sprays applied to the vulnerable pressure points.

Woman To Pay Support

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — Noting that "women are clamoring for women's lib," a judge here has ordered a female truck driver to pay child support for her four children.

After hearing testimony Tuesday that Sherry Lynn Walker abandoned her family in August, 1972, Judge O. Q. Claflin of the Wyandotte County district court also awarded her former husband custody of the children, all household goods and furniture and a 1962 auto.

"In this case," the judge said, "I decided equal treatment was just the right thing to do."

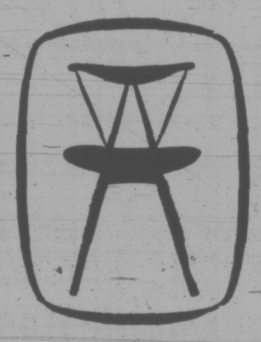

Judge Claflin ordered that the wife pay $10 a week for each of four children, ranging in ages from two to eight.

The judge said it was the first time in his 17 years on the bench in which he has awarded child support payments to the father.

THE SHORTEST and lightest of the pair is the girl. Nancy Lopowicz, 15, of Independence, Mo., doesn't weigh as much as this 134-pound sturgeon she landed near Kenora. The fish, six-foot, four-inches and with a 34½-inch girth, took an hour and 20 minutes to land. It's being mounted.

Living Areas 'Inhumane'

OTTAWA (CP) — Claims by some southern Ontario fruit and vegetable growers that they couldn't get labor earlier this year backfired Wednesday when the government released a report which said migrant workers have to put up with "inhumane" working and living conditions.

Manpower Minister Robert Andras, said only a percentage of growers is responsible for the situation—"10, 15 to 20 per cent of them."

"There has been quite an attack on the department of manpower, the most vocal of which seem to come from the group I'm describing."

He rejected the growers' claims that crops were rotting in the fields because labor was not available.

"The failure to be able to attract employees to pick crops results from poor accommodation, poor housing and bad working conditions."

" . . . We found examples of inhumane working conditions where Mexican families who were brought in, in some cases illegally, were given one pay to the father of the family."

The pay, of between $50 and $60 and often for a seven-day work week, went only to the father despite the fact his wife and children would be working alongside him.

The report said one Quebec family was living in two shacks — parents in one and eight children, aged four to 17, in the other, without a toilet.

"While the employer claims the family could easily earn up to $150 a day, the father said that all members of the family, except for the four-year-old, work in the fields for a total family income of between $50 and $60 a week."

In another case, the seven children in a Mexican family all had hernias.

"The family, who came to Canada last spring, live in indescribable squalor in a shack where cardboard and newspapers had been used to keep rain out."

As for growers' claims that Canadian workers are not available:

"We can supply manpower to pick crops. There'll be no need for crops to go rotten in the ground.

"We can get the labor but we won't tolerate, and we won't be party to, putting workers in there under these conditions.

"But please don't mix this up with the fact that there still are jobs available by decent employers that are going begging," he told a news conference.

Andras admitted there is little the federal government can do about the living conditions unless there is a serious health problem. But he said the Ontario government has been briefed on the situation and he expects it to take action.

Neither was there much he could do about "brokerage fees" paid by growers to persons who organize recruitment and transportation of migrant workers to Ontario.

Russia Praises West While Lashing China

MOSCOW (WP) — Soviet Communist leader Leonid Brezhnev Wednesday held out strong hope for a permanent relaxation of east-west tensions, but promised a continued struggle against "the theory and practice of Maoism."

In his first important public statement on foreign affairs since the June summit meeting in Washington, Brezhnev balanced optimism about relations with the capitalist west with skepticism about the continued dispute with China.

Speaking in Almaata in Soviet central Asia, 150 miles from the Chinese border, Brezhnev said Chinese policy was "based on rabid anti-Sovietism and subversive activity against the socialist countries."

By implication, he seemed to say that China didn't qualify as a socialist country itself.

The Soviet leader added that the U.S.S.R. remains willing to improve relations with China, but only if the Chinese "give up encroachments on the interests of the socialist states."

Though this rhetoric is strong, Brezhnev's hopeful worlds on relations with the capitalist west may have made a stronger impression on Soviet citizens.

(The speech was broadcast nation-wide on television Wednesday afternoon.)

The Chinese problem has been a fact of life here for many years, but the dramatic improvement in relations with the west is still a new phenomenon.

Brezhnev said the movement toward detente was continuing, and "the threat of a direct conflict between the two world systems (capitalism and communism) is weaking."

"We will strive further," he added, to completely eliminate the threat of world war, so that the policy of peaceful co-existence will triumph on the earth."

There is reason to hope, Brezhnev said, the treaties and agreements reached in recent times by east and west represent "the beginning of a fundamental restructuring of international relations."

Brezhnev noted that there are still some people opposed to detente — "in the capitalist world," he said, but the reference could apply to Soviet Hawks as well — who want to "increase military budgets and build up nuclear forces."

(According to western estimates, the Soviet Union is still expanding its conventional and nuclear forces, while western forces are not growing.)

Nevertheless, Brezhnev said, "Far-seeing politicians and influential business circles", in the west "are more clearly coming to understand the necessity for peaceful coexistence." He added, "a tendency toward reasonable co-operation with the socialist states exists and continues to gain strength in the capitalist world."

All this represents a heavy dose of optimism for the Soviet public, which until recent times had been warned repeatedly of imperialist threats and machinations.

Brezhnev took the offensive on the issue of freer exchange of people and ideas between east and west, a question that still divides the two camps and one that the Soviets have treated very carefully in the past.

"We are confident of the correctness of our Marxist-Leninist ideology," Brezhnev said. He said the widening exchanges of people, information and "spiritual values" that will come naturally in conditions of detente will help the Soviet Union.

CHARGE 'COVERS REAL ISSUE'

CAIRO (UPI) — A government source today declined comment on an Israeli military spokesman's assertion that 10 to 20 North Korean pilots are now flying Egyptian combat aircraft.

The source said he saw an ulterior motive behind the timing of the Israeli claim.

He said he believed the Israelis "chose to make a lot of noise about this in order to distract attention from the act of piracy they committed against a Lebanese civilian airliner last week."

He noticed the Israeli claim came on the very day when the UN Security Council's debate of the plane abduction culminated in a unanimous censure.

Prisoner Use —As Last Resort

SEATTLE (AP) — Biomedical experimentation on prisoners should be sharply curtailed, Dr. Richard Wade of the American Public Health Association told prison officials Wednesday.

In a presentation to the American Correctional Association's annual congress of corrections, Wade said prisoners should be used only when it can be shown that no other subjects can be found and that the experiment is warranted.

He said use of juveniles and mental patients in experiments should be stopped totally.

"Experimentation often conjures up connotations of dark basements and castles where man and beast alike, both alive and dead, are dissected, tortured and otherwise experimented on," he said.

"Just how much experimentation has gone on and continues in these populations in institutions is unknown."

The public health official told the conference that experimentation has saved thousands of lives and that the main question at issue is the use of "captive populations" as subjects.

Wade, from Washington, D.C., called a 40-year experiment with over 400 men at Tuskegee, Ala., who were not treated for syphillis "an unforgiveable exception —with the remnants of biomedical experimentation was in its dark ages.

Wade said prisoners have been used frequently in past experiments, "more for the convenience of the investigator than for any unique characteristics they might have."

After 200 Years Aussies Give Blacks Better Deal

By IAN McCAUSLAND

SYDNEY, Ausstralia (AP) — After 200 years of white domination, Australia's indigenous blacks—the aborigines whose ancestors invented the boomerang—are starting to get a better deal.

They are native to this continent claimed for Britain by Capt. John Cook in 1770 and settled 88 years later as a British penal colony.

But the aborigines had been here for centuries, roaming the land as hunters and food-gatherers and devising a culture that exists today. Anthropologists classified them as Australoids, but they are more commonly known as aborigines—the original people.

They now comprise 140,000 of Australia's 13 million people.

Tennis star Evonne Goolagong is part aborigine.

Lionel Rose was the first aborigine to win a world sports crown when he took the world bantamweight boxing championship in 1966.

But it is only recently that the aborigines have managed to break through racial barriers.

ASHAMED OF ANCESTRY

The Labor government of Prime Minister Gough Whitlam, elected last December, has begun to accelerate the movement to give black Australians a better life. Soon after taking office Whitlam described the aboriginal situation as a national shame. A social service report said the aborigines "are trapped in a culture of poverty."

Whitlam appointed Gordon Bryant as his minister for aboriginal affairs. It was the first time that this post had not been part of a conglomerate ministry involving the arts, tourism and the environment.

Bryant has set about overturning and reshaping policies to assist the aborigines.

"It is a huge task," said Bryant, 58. "Aborigines have developed an inferiority complex. . . . They are ashamed of their ancestry.

"They are not good at resisting and prefer to step aside if trouble or a problem arises."

Trouble and problems show up in statistics on aborigines:

—Aboriginal babies make up one per cent of the infant population but account for 10 per cent of all infant deaths in the first year and 28 per cent of second-year deaths.

—In 1971, he infant mortality rate among aborigines in central Australia was 296 deaths per 1,000 births. The over-all rate for whites and blacks in Australia is 17 deaths per 1,000 births.

—Aborigines feature highly in prison populations. In country towns, they are often the only regular occupants of local jails.

FACE DISCRIMINATION

Here in Australia's biggest city, the 9,000 aboriginal residents are a third of one per cent of the 2.7 million population, but make up 10 per cent of the jail population. Most offences committed by the aborigines involve assault, petty theft, drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

Discriminatory legislation still exists, in particular in the state of Queensland.

Aborigines living on aboriginal settlements or reserves in Queensland can be jailed at will by the settlement manager—usually a white—expelled, or prevented from living in the settlement.

In some settlements, the manager controls the finances of the individual families.

The thinking behind this is that paternalism is necessary to save aborigines from themselves: drunkenness has become a major disease in many aboriginal communities.

Bryant visited the Palm sland, Queensland, aboriginal settlement recently.

"The conditions were shocking, depressing and beyond belief in this country in this day and age," he said.

"The 1,200 agorigines there were broken in spirit."

SUCCESS IN SPORTS

Despite the discriminatory laws, aborigines have scored major successes in sports, and have achieved some fame in the arts. Miss Goolagong, 21, is the best known. Ranking among the top four best women tennis players in the world, she won the women's singles at Wimbledon in 1971. Miss Goolagong says she is proud of being part aboriginal but is rarely aware of it.

"I don't think of myself as being colored but of being Australian," she says.

Tough sports such as boxing and rugby have more than a sprinkling of aboriginal stars.

In 1966 there was bantamweight Lionel Rose. Now Tony Mundine, current holder of the Commonwealth middleweight boxing title, is a strong contender for the world crown.

Even Sir Doug Nicholls, 66, a clergyman recently knighted for his aboriginal advancement work, hit the headlines first as a professional runner and athlete.

Roslyn Watson, 19, became the first aboriginal graduate of the Australian ballet school this year.

The work of several aboriginal artists is in demand and paintings by the late Albert Namatjira are in major Australian galleries and collections.

Bryant is pressing for a bill which would outlaw discrimination throughout the country. The state of South Australia has such legislation and has successfully prosecuted offenders, usually bar owners who have refused to serve aborigines.

Moves are under way for the central government to take over control of aboriginal affairs from the governments of the five states with aboriginal populations.

With the exception of Queensland, the states have indicated no objections. Even Queensland opposition relates more to its running battle against what it considers to be creeping centralism.

CONCRETE RAIL TIES

WINNIPEG (CP) — The days of the steel rail on a wooden tie may be nearing an end as Canadian National Railways approves a $10-million concrete tie project.

R. J. Hansen, vice-president of CN's prairie region, said the decision to use concrete was made after a 12-year search fo ra replacement for wood.

Concrete was chosen "almost by a process of elimination" as other materials were either too costly or lacked necessary strength, he said.

The first of what could be several projects will be the installation of concrete ties along the 45-mile stretch between Winnipeg to Portage La Prairie beginning next summer.

The distance requires some 100,000 ties and could lead to new industry for Winnipeg.

Although the initial contract will be awarded to the low bidder, Winnipeg firms will be able to offer lower transportation costs for materials for the three-year project.

Hansen said a substitute for wooden ties is needed because of escalating prices.

"The Americans are making tremendous demands on our timber resources and the market for finished lumber is so good that we're having trouble getting enough ties as it is."

With the introduction of concrete, the railway hopes to save on maintenance costs over the years, despite higher installation costs.

An experiment over a fully integrated concrete track system conducted near Jasper, Alta., showed that concrete ties could weather Canada's harsh climate and terrain.

Grim Social Outlook

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T. (CP) — A report commissioned by the territorial government predicts that increased gas and oil developments in the north will produce increased rates of crime, alcoholism, welfare and racism.

It recommends improvements in police facilities in the Northwest Territories.

The study also says consultants in alcoholism and social welfare should be employed to back established social service personnel in a team approach to communities facing stress because of development.

The report, prepared by the Yellowknife consulting firm of Gemil North, said consideration should be given to forming an association, or union, of northern workers to make sure they are not squeezed out of job opportunities because of "organizational structures of southern-based labor unions and contractors."

It recommended encouragement of hunters and trappers associations to help protect those who still live off the land.

The government should study the cost of subsidizing services to encourage more home ownership and ease the housing shortage.

Land speculation could be reduced by leasing, rather than selling land to short-term, boom-related industries. This would encourage proper long-term growth in communities.

The study said alcoholism is related to money.

"Cash income (as opposed to living off the land) increases alcohol consumption as alcohol is a preferable intoxicant to alternatives such as hair spray, etc."

Welfare was likely to increase as development becomes more intense.

The "white influx" and the increased mobility of northern natives will "result in an increased level of sophisticated crime for both whites and natives."

Other social deteriorations, such as social dissension, breakdown of families and child neglect are predicted in the report.

The report recommends that more ancillary health services be established because of psychiatric problems resulting from development.

It says health care would be improved if complete responsibility for it were transferred to the territorial government. The costs and jurisdiction are currently shared between the federal and territorial governments.

Chinese Climate Easing

By JAMES PRINGLE

PEKING (Reuter) — The strains of a Strauss waltz played on an accordion wafted over a park in central Peking recently.

Elsewhere, Chinese gardeners enjoying a rubber of bridge in a garden invited a foreign diplomat to join them.

On May Day, Premier Chou En-lai's wife, Teng Ying-chao, strolled hand-in-hand with American film actress Shirley Maclaine in a park, then talked with her for two hours over orange drinks in a pavilion.

And a few days later, workmen began removing 11 giant billboards in Tien An Men Square bearing the slogan "unite to win still greater victories." Their disappearance opened up a beautiful vista south of the Gate of Heavenly Peace to Chien Men Gate at the southern entrance to the old city of Peking.

At state functions in the Great Hall of the People, Chinese officials are talking more openly to diplomats and correspondents than ever before.

RESTRICTIONS OFF

During the last three months, in fact, residents in the Chinese capital have noticed a startling easing in the political climate.

"It has become more relaxed in the past few months than in the whole of the previous year," one diplomat here said. "I can hardly believe I am in China any more."

Strauss on an accordion might be routine in many countries. But the sight of a Chinese in a grey cotton "Mao suit" squeezing out The Blue Danube is uncommon here—and would have been unthinkable last year.

But the London and Vienna philharmonic orchestras have performed in Peking since then, and word is out that Western classics may be played again for the first time since the cultural revolution without charges of "capitalist roading" being levelled at the musician.

Bridge and poker are the most popular card games in China—though gambling is forbidden.

Other signs of relaxation include the opening of the Western Hills near Peking to resident foreigners, the dropping of the word "revolutionary" from a radio broadcast called until recently the "revolutionary cultural program," and thriving radio lessons in English.

Visitors to the northeast China city of Shenyang (formerly Mukden) report girls wearing stylish coiffures. In Nanking, one can buy a series of 10 pictures of girls from the classical Chinese novel, Dream of the Red Chamber. In the past they would have been referred to as "so-called beauties," a pejorative term in China.

Observers here see the rapid changes in China as a process of relaxation approved by Chairman Mao Tse-tung and administered by Chou.

But the observers believe the relaxation is unlikely to mean any slipping in the battle against creeping capitalism or revisionism. "Economism," or the provision of material incentives, is still roundly condemned in the press.

Judge Lifts MD's 'Infamous' Tag

VANCOUVER (CP)—A Grand Forks doctor who "over-serviced" patients for undue financial gain was guilty of unprofessional rather than infamous conduct, a British Columbia Supreme Court judge ruled Wednesday.

Mr. Justice K. E. Meredith referred the case of Dr. Salaruddin Ahmad back to the council of the B.C. College of Physicians and Surgeons to reconsider disciplinary action in view of his findings.

Dr. Ahmad had appealed under the Medical Act against a college resolution that he be stricken from the medical register effective April 1 this year.

The council, after considering a report of an inquiry committee, found Dr. Ahmad had over-serviced 16 of 30 patients and "had conducted his practice in a manner deliberately intended by him to enhance unduly the monetary return to himself by systematic over-servicing . . ."

★

VANCOUVER (CP)—A rockslide which created rapids several hundred feet long in the Chilcotin River Aug. 1 does not appear to have blocked the salmon runs to any extent, a fisheries engineer said Wednesday.

George Nielson said three helicopter sweeps over the rocky gorge and a ground level check indicate normal early runs of chinook and sockeye salmon.

★

SURREY (CP)—Dozens of chickens were killed and hundreds of others escaped Wednesday after a large truck taking crates of the birds to a processing plant overturned into a deep ditch.

RCMP assisted employees of the trucking firm in rounding up many of the chickens, but hundreds escaped.

★

VANCOUVER (CP)—National Harbors Board figures show total cargo moved through the Port of Vancouver during the first six months of this year increased 25 per cent from the same period last year.

Inward and outward tonnage, both domestic and foreign, was 22.2 million tons, compared with 17.7 million tons in 1972.

William Rathie, Pacific region member of the NHB, forecast a year-end total of at least 43 million tons. Last year, a record total of 36.7 million tons was moved.

★

VANCOUVER (CP)—The provincial Pollution Control Board Wednesday granted Weldwood of Canada a 4½-month extension on a deadline of today for installing pollution control equipment at its Port Moody cedar sawmill.

The company had said it would have to lay off 350 workers at Flavelle Cedar Products Ltd. if the extension were not granted. It said the required equipment would not be available by today.

The board decided to give the mill until Dec. 31 to install equipment which will cut out smoke emission from the mill.

★

TRAIL (CP)—David Anderson, British Columbia Liberal leader, said here Wednesday that the high-price situation in Canada is the result of a careless, simplistic attempt by the United States to control prices and wages. He said that instead, the purchasing power of the consumer must be increased.

★

PENTICTON (CP)—A convoy of United Fruit Growers will travel to Vancouver this weekend to provide fruit and produce for the Vancouver food festival. A growers' spokesman said the convoy would take place even if British Columbia Fruit Board regulations are changed before the weekend.

★

VANCOUVER (CP)—The Canadian Union of Public Employees is seeking a British Columbia Supreme Court order to obtain reinstatement of five employees dismissed from the Quarry House Restaurant nearly two months ago.

L. N. Johnson, CUPE representative, said Wednesday the Labor Relations Board recently ordered the reinstatment of the five dismissed employees and awarded them a total of $3,200 for wages earned during their period of dismissal up to July 31.

"To this date, the employer has failed to comply with the (Aug. 1) order of the board," Johnson said in a news release.

OFY PENALTY DROPPED

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Indian Affairs officials have stopped penalizing welfare families with children in Opportunities for Youth Projects.

A directive from the department's regional office in Vancouver has instructed the officials to give full welfare to the parents of children in OFY projects at Fort Ware and Stellako.

The policy switch followed protests that payments to parents were slashed to offset the children's earnings.

One family with a single child working on the OFY project at Fort Ware found its monthly welfare payment slashed by $274.

The son earned only $280 in the month and was ordered to recompense his parents, which left him with $6 to show for his work.

Remove Those Spikes; The Roots Need Food

Gardeners who meticulously remove faded roses each day are seen to leave gladiolus spikes on the plants long after the flower color has been forgotten. There must be a reason though it cannot be to improve either the appearance or health of the plant.

The ideal time to remove gladiolus flower stems is when two or three florets have faded, since this prevents the topheavy look that becomes so noticeable when only the last blooms at the tip are still open, the lower ones having faded.

This early removal also gives th. ormous roots a chance to rebuild before the leaves ripen, an important process when you are lifting and storing corms for future plantings.

The flowers thus removed are useful in the house for low bowl decorations. Just snap off the faded blooms, shorten the stems with a long slanting cut and set them on a pinholder so that each spike faces in the desired direction. A few dark green shrub leaves massed at the base will hide the pin and the stem ends.

Not often do we find a seedpod on stems left with faded gladiolus blooms, so this is not so much a case of preventing seed formation as it is of appearance and the early start on the new corm to be formed. A great deal of food is used to develop, open and maintain the upright spike of 10 or 12 perfect florets. Unless the spikes are removed, only a short period remains to get started on the rebuilding.

Like other garden plants, water is as necessary after flowering is finished as it is before it begins. Rebuilding of the roots means a need for food, and a plant's food is chiefly dependent on the moisture content of the soil at its roots — the plant cannot take in solid foods, it must have a liquid diet.

★ ★ ★

The same need for moisture at their roots is shown by chrysanthemums which are now budding in preparation for their season of bloom a little later.

From the time of planting the rooted cuttings in spring until now, chrysanthemums have depended on ample moisture to get the food from the soil for making large plants full of buds.

When you see the structure of a chrysanthemum plant and realize that it has been manufactured since spring from soil nutrients, you suddenly realize the responsibility of the gardener in providing the means of sustenance.

So long as we conserve our water supply we shall be able to supply it as needed by our garden plants.

SOLUTION FRIDAY

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

After our South declarer had gone down a trick in today's deal, his partner — a lover of poetry — sardonically articulated the words of Robert Browning: "God's in His heaven; all's right with the world."

In his caustic way, North was trying to tell his partner that the latter had played the hand as though there weren't a worry in the world; and that if South had only taken a moment to reflect about the "evil" that might be lurking about, he could have relaxed later, as he luxuriated in the words of Shakespeare, "All's well that ends well." Both sides vulnerable. East deals.

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1 ♡	4 ♠	Dbl.	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Two of ♡.

East put up the heart king on the opening lead, and South won the trick with his ace. South now mechanically played the queen of hearts, after which he intended to lead a third heart and trump it in dummy. His doubled contract would then be fulfilled.

But, as is evident, West ruffed South's queen of hearts at trick two. He then returned a trump, declarer winning the trick in his own hand. South now trumped a third lead of hearts, but he still had a losing heart remaining in his own hand. And with the loss of two diamond tricks being inevitable, South suffered a one-trick set.

Had declarer stopped to count his tricks before playing to trick two, he would have fulfilled his contract. In his own hand he had seven trump winners, in addition to two hearts. If he could ruff just one heart in dummy, he would have his tenth trick.

Since there was a distinct possibility that West's deuce of hearts opening lead was a singleton, declarer should not have attempted to cash the queen of hearts at trick two. Instead, he should have led a low heart and conceded the trick to the defenders.

Assuming that a trump would next be returned by the defenders, South would win the trick in his own hand. He would then ruff his remaining low heart with the board's jack of trumps. The South hand would now be re-entered by ruffing a club, after which declarer would gather in the adversely-held trumps. Ten tricks would now be there for the taking.

$1 Out of $5 For Packages

LONDON (FWF) — Scientists all over the world are experimenting with ideas to solve one of today's biggest social problems — the disposal of litter. The problem becomes more acute each year because of the increasing emphasis being put on packaging and bottling. British industry alone spends more than £800 million (almost $2 billion) annually on packages of all shapes, sizes and materials. And most of it ends up in the dustbin — or scattered around the streets and the countryside.

For every $5 a housewife spends, $1 goes on packages or bottles. Every year 750 million plastic bottles alone are dumped by British housewives.

So what's to be done about it? The best bet seems to be a biodegradable plastic that disintegrates harmlessly after a period of exposure to the elements. Experiments in America have shown that containers in this material show signs of deterioration after a month and have gone completely in 150 days.

Another excellent idea from America is a fungus that feeds off car tires and eventually reduces them to a powder which can then be used as fertilizer. With more and more cars coming on to the world's roads, this could be vital in keeping the used tire problem in check.

In Britain, progress is being made in disposing of another litter menace — tin cans. More than 3,000 million cans of beer are sold every year, and they don't decompose easily. But scientists at Imperial Chemical Industries (ICI) have been experimenting with beer in plastic tubes. The beer is pumped into them under high pressure and two sets of pouring holes are sealed with plastic tape.

Disintegrating plastic containers are also likely to be used in the next decade to replace the wide variety of commodities sold in tins.

One of the few people who seems to have solved part of the container problem is Queen Elizabeth. At garden parties, she serves drinks in paper mugs decorated with blue drawings of Sandringham House, one of the Royal residences. The mugs are so attractive that everyone takes them home to keep as mementoes.

Apart from containers and bottles, the problem of the disposal of the nation's general rubbish remains. The statistics are staggering. It has been calculated that every year, a typical British family living in a town creates two tons of rubbish. Collecting it, and disposing of it, costs a total of more than 125 million pounds ($300 million) a year.

Every day, the Greater London Council disposes of 10,000 tons of rubbish. No less than 30 tons of litter were left in Wembley sports stadium alone after a pop festival last year.

Most of the country's refuse is dealt with by "tipping" or burning. The rubbish not left in dumps all over the countryside is used in land reclamation. Every day the GLC sends 2,500 tons of refuse down the River Thames to the Essex marches.

Litter-louts are the main problem. Rubbish properly put out for collection is one thing, but the real social problem concerns unthinking or uncaring people who drop cigarette ends, bus tickets and sweet-wrappings in the streets or other public places.

Britons haven't yet followed the example of Singapore, where citizens are automatically sent to prison for a few days if they are caught dropping rubbish in public places, but fines here have been increased from 10 pounds to 100 pounds ($240). And the government has increased its grant to the Keep Britain Tidy movement from 20,000 pounds to 200,000 pounds ($480,000).

UGLY DUCKLING FLIES OFF

NEW YORK (UPI) — Somebody has stolen the Ugly Duckling.

The statue of Hans Christian Andersen's ugly duckling was reported missing from its base in Central Park last Friday and parks department personnel so far have been unable to find it.

The duck was about two-feet tall, weighed about 50 pounds and stood at the foot of a seven-foot statue of the Danish storyteller.

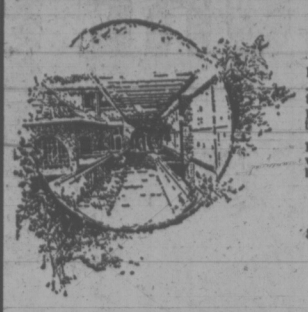

Its bronze was polished to a high gloss by the seats of the pants of thousands of clambering children who gathered near the statue to hear Diane Wolkstein, the city's official storyteller, read Andersen's fairy tales.

The parks department estimated it would cost about $2,000 to replace.

The duck was a gift to the city in 1956 from the children of Denmark.

It had been stolen twice before but found in the brush nearby.

SHE HAS BURNING DESIRE

ANAHEIM, Calif. (UPI) — A devout Catholic mother of eight turned into a sex-hungry woman resorting to barrom pickups because she was burned in a sauna bath, according to a lawsuit filed here.

The suit said the woman developed two personalities—Maria and Betty—that war with each other for control of her body. She was identified as Maria Ebelia Parson, 46.

She is being treated by a psychiatrist, who said she had made overtures to him too, the suit said. A jury trial was scheduled to begin Oct. 29.

The suit was filed Monday in superior court by Marvin Lewis, the San Francisco lawyer who won $50,000 for typist Gloria Sykes, 25, in a case that received much attention at the time. Miss Sykes maintained that injuries she suffered in a cable car accident turned her into a nymphomaniac, seeking sex with numbers of men.

"That was nothing compared to this," Lewis said.

"Mrs. Parson has been sexually involved with at least two dozen other men. On one occasion her husband had to follow her to Mexico to get her away from someone she met in a bar," Lewis said.

Freedom After 3 Years

CHICAGO — Wilbur McDonald strode from the courtroom a free man Wednesday after spending three years in prison for a murder he said he never committed.

Cook County circuit court judge Frank Wilson, who sentenced McDonald to 100 to 150 years in prison on a murder charge stemming from the July, 1970, slaying of Agnes Lehman, ordered McDonald freed on $20,000 recognizance bond Wednesday.

Authorities reopened McDonald's case after another man, Lester Harrison, 49, Chicago, signed statements which related to the Lehman murder. Harrison was charged with the murder of Judith Elaine Ott, one of four women killed in the past year in the Lakefront area of Chicago.

LONDON — A letter in The Times proposes a unique high-level exchange between Britain and Canada involving Queen Elizabeth and Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau. Writes Leslie James of Bolton, Lancashire: "If, as has been suggested, our Queen could be loaned to Canada for a resident term of duty there, may we, please, as some compensation for Her Majesty's absence, have for that period Mr. Trudeau as our prime minister here?"

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont. — Paul Anka, the Ottawa-born singer-composer, said Wednesday he wants to boost Canadian talent. "I'm spending more time here to perform and promote talent," said the 32-year-old Anka who was in Niagara Falls prior to a performance in Buffalo, N.Y. "It's all emerging creatively in this country."

SEATTLE — John Meier, once an adviser to billionaire hermit Howard Hughes, is free on $100,000 bond and has been allowed to return to Canada.

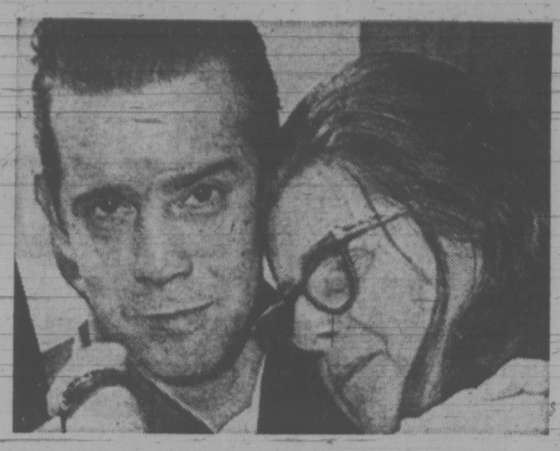

Meier, indicted last week by a Las Vegas grand jury on two counts of income tax evasion, was instructed to return for his trial.

Magistrate John Weinberg freed Meier despite objections from the U.S. attorney's office, which argued that Meier has foreign bank accounts and might not return for the trial.

Meier had said he plans to return to British Columbia to work as a consultant to a British firm investing in Canadian films and television productions.

Meier was arrested last Thursday at Point Roberts. He said he had been living for a year in Tsawwassen.

HONG KONG — A retired Chinese-American medical research has reported that he visited Mao Tse-tung 12 days ago and found the 79-year-old Chinese Communist chairman in excellent health and mentally alert. Dr. C. P. Li, formerly of the National Institute of Health in Washington, D.C., and his wife arrived in Hong Kong after a 44-day tour of China.

OPERA GOES ELECTRONIC

STRATFORD, Ont. (CP) — The world premiere of a Canadian operatic work, Exiles, composed by Raymond and Beverley Pannell, startled the audience with improvised music Wednesday night.

The work, called an opera for the theatre, concerns the fate of a man and woman who go to live in the Welsh village of Aberfan, scene of the 1966 landslide that killed 116 children, to expiate the collective guilt of society.

Presented at the Third Stage theatre as the season's final offering at the Stratford Festival, Exiles drew comments from critics for its unusual electronic music on tape and improvisation by seven orchestral players and four singers.

Critics comments included:

Carl Cunningham, Toronto Star: "The text could often not be understood in many beautifully sung improvised portions. While abrupt changes of dramatic pace and gesture between spoken and sung portions brought some welcome variety to the theatrical style of the piece, they again pointed up the tremendous difficultiesin trying to blend the two forms into a unified dramatic piece."

John Kraglund, Toronto Globe and Mail: "Pannell . . . has created a work that should have as much appeal to the theatregoer as to the opera buff. There is some question as to whether he has served either particularly well. . . . But is it enough to come away from an hour and forty-five minutes of opera, without any feeling of having been even temporarily moved by the performance."

Harvey Chusid, Vancouver Sun: "The performance is loaded with ambiguities as the audience is confronted with a 90-minute succession of mostly ineffectual image intended to create varying levels of reality. Only occasionally . . . is there any involvement with the stage proceedings."

Lauretta Thistle, Ottawa Citizen: "Exiles . . . has a clear central theme which triumphantly stands out over a barrage of dramatic side issues and some intricate symbolism . . . Though it had little continuity on the surface, all the surrealism and humor fall into place when one leaves the theatre."

Bernard Thorne, Stratford Beacon Herald: "Exiles . . . . proved to be an unhappy marriage between operatic aria and electronic gimmickry. It unleashed a Pandora's box of super-hip theatrical cliches that had the audience staggering from strobes to multi-screen captions to a meaningless musical score of colored lines projected on two screens."

DECISION

August 10, 1973

PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT

The Canadian Radio-Television Commission announces the following decision effective on August 10, 1973.

Decision CRTC 73-398

TELEVISION SERVICES IN THE VANCOUVER AND VICTORIA AREAS

At its Public Hearing in Vancouver commencing June 11, 1973, the Commission considered applications from three private groups to provide television service to the city of Vancouver, transmitting on Channel 10. These applicants were:

Chako Broadcasting Ltd.
Great Pacific Industries Limited
West Coast Broadcasting Ltd.

The Commission, on this occasion also heard an application from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to use Channel 10 to provide television service to the city of Victoria and portions of both Vancouver Island and the mainland.

DECISION

The Commission denies the application of the private groups to provide a television service to the Vancouver area on Channel 10. The Commission has also decided that it must deny the application of the CBC to use Channel 10 to serve Victoria and adjacent areas.

Notwithstanding its decision to deny the CBC application for the use of Channel 10 to serve Victoria, the Commission is convinced that a CBC owned and operated station must be located in Victoria and the full CBC television service extended to Victoria and Vancouver Island at the earliest opportunity. Technical possibilities for the achievement of these goals are set out below.

Service in the Vancouver Area

Vancouver is presently served by CBUT, providing CBC service, and by CHAN, providing CTV service. Parts of Vancouver also receive CHEK, a private Victoria station affiliated to the CBC. Several United States television signals are also received, either off-air or by cable television.

Vancouver is a large and growing city with an assured potential in the cultural, educational and entertainment fields. As a seaport providing access to the Pacific it is also destined to be not only a major industrial and distribution centre, but also a meeting place where new energies and ideas can develop.

In these circumstances the CRTC has decided that the three applications for the use of Channel 10 in Vancouver do not adequately reflect the potential of a rapidly growing city with the unique cultural possibilities inherent in its location and people. They fail to broaden the television programming services already provided so as to give greater scope to the interests, views and concerns of people living in the Vancouver area. Insufficient attention was also paid to countering the often-expressed opinion that the views of people living in the area are not now being adequately represented either in the area or to the rest of Canada.

These denials are based on a careful assessment by the Commission of the written applications and oral submissions, and do not necessarily confirm the varying views expressed by the intervenors.

The Commission is convinced that there is a potential for a licensee to provide valuable cultural, educational and entertainment programming on a third Canadian English language television service in the Vancouver area but that this potential was not sufficiently recognized or developed in the applications heard at the Vancouver hearing.

The Commission will announce later when it will call for applications for a third English language television service for the Vancouver area.

Service in the Victoria Area

The Commission endorses without reservation the stated desire of the CBC to establish a CBC owned and operated television station in Victoria to serve Victoria and Vancouver Island.

The significance of Victoria as the capital city of British Columbia must be more fully recognized. In addition Victoria is emerging as a vital residential and industrial centre. This, coupled with the growth of other Vancouver Island communities, demands recognition by way of television facilities that will reflect Island community interests to the residents of the area and to the rest of Canada.

The CRTC expects that the establishment of a CBC owned and operated TV station to serve Victoria, with suitable retransmission facilities at strategic points to serve the Island, will be a first step in this direction.

The Commission was not impressed with the programming plans proposed by the CBC in its application. Furthermore, the Commission does not agree with the contention of the CBC that Channel 10 must be used to service Victoria and at the same time be used to correct coverage deficiencies of CBC-TV station CBUT now licensed for the Vancouver area.

The Commission believes that the allocation of frequencies in the southern British Columbia coastal region requires considerable improvement in order to overcome the serious duplications and overlap of television signals in the region. The Commission has studied the coverage of the present Channels 2, 6 and 8 and the coverage proposed by the CBC for Channel 10.

The Commission has determined that Channel 3 is available for television service for the Victoria region. However, Channel 3 is restricted in power and coverage because it is presently being used by the CBC in Chilliwack, B.C.

The CBC has been providing part of its national broadcasting service to Vancouver Island through its affiliate in Victoria, CHEK, transmitting on Channel 6. If the CBC provides its full service through construction of its own television facility in Victoria, then CHEK, owned by British Columbia Television Limited, has indicated it would wish to disaffiliate to provide CTV network service. Such disaffiliation raises concern about the extension of CBC and CTV network services to the rest of Vancouver Island. It also involves questions as to the optimum use of frequencies.

In light of these considerations, the Commission requests the CBC and British Columbia Television Limited to consider and propose solutions, including filing of applications, to ensure the following:

(a) the best use of frequency spectrum, taking into account the present assignment of Channels 2, 3, 6 and 8, the potential use of Channel 3 and UHF frequencies in the region, and the possibilities for improving the use of these frequencies;

(b) the extension of both CBC and CTV services on Vancouver Island;

(c) the development of programming to reflect the interests and needs of the people of Victoria and Vancouver Island;

(d) the development of programming to reflect the role of Victoria as the provincial capital of British Columbia.

Monique Coupal,
Secretary.

Canadian Radio-Television Commission
Conseil de la Radio-Télévision Canadienne

If you were in Canada by November 30, 1972, and have remained here since, as a visitor or without legal status, we're going to give you until midnight, October 15, 1973 to make our country your country.

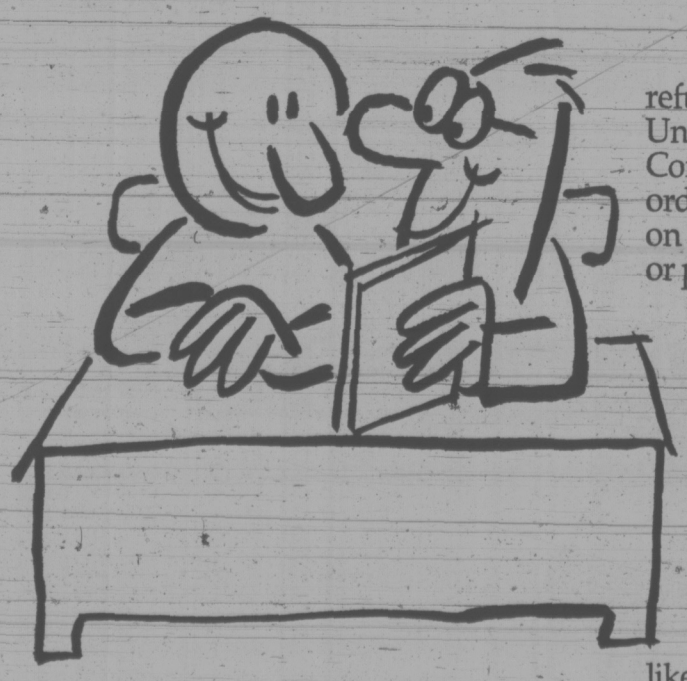

If you're making a success of life in Canada, we think you should have all the benefits enjoyed by legal residents.

So, until midnight, October 15, we're going to help you get them.

Until then, you may apply for landed immigrant status (the first step towards full citizenship) without any penalties at all because you came into the country or remained here illegally.

And until that same date, your application will be judged by very relaxed rules.

You may be granted landed immigrant status if you are a refugee protected by the United Nations Refugee Convention. If you are ordinarily dependent on a Canadian citizen or permanent resident for support. If a Canadian citizen or permanent resident is mainly dependent on you for support. Or if you are eighteen years of age or over, and have shown that you have established yourself in Canada, or are likely to be able to do so.

Immigration officers have been given special authority to deal generously with your application. They will take into account such factors as your family relationships in Canada, your financial stability and employment record, and any other evidence that shows you can adapt well to life in Canada.

A lot of factors will be considered, and you may qualify on any one of them.

As you can see, we're making it easy. But much as we want to help you, after October 15, we won't be able to. After that, the new law says that you will be unable to qualify for landed immigrant status while in Canada, and have no appeal against deportation.

Just give us your name and address, and the facts of your case. We want you to belong, and to be able to participate fully in the life around you.

And we'll do everything we can to make our country your country.

For further information, phone, write, or visit your nearest Canada Immigration Centre, or, if there isn't one near you, your nearest Canada Manpower Centre. (Services given by Canadian Immigration Officers are free.)

Canada Immigration Centres are open to receive applications weekdays from 8:00 am to 8:00 pm and Saturdays from 9:00 am to 5:00 pm, and from 8:00 am to midnight Monday, October 15.

Cambodia Fronts Quiet

Times News Services

PHNOM PENH (AP) — Small-scale fighting was reported today on three sides of this capital city. But the Cambodian government said it sees no sign of a new offensive shaping up against the city despite the United States bombing halt.

Col. Am Rong, chief spokesman for the Cambodian military command, said refugees from areas held by the insurgents reported they are still trying to make up heavy losses suffered in the final weeks of the U.S. air strikes.

"They are re-grouping and resupplying, and it could be one or two months before they are ready for a big push," he said.

The government reported the recapture of Kompong Kantuot, a district town 11 miles southeast of here, and the clearing of Route 38, which runs around the outside of the city's southern defence perimeter.

In Washington, President Nixon has signalled that he finally is conceding the United States Congress equal power in setting policy for Indochina, administration officials say.

The acknowledgement, Nixon's first direct concession on the issue, came in a statement on Cambodia issued Wednesday by the White House.

It said: "It should be clearly understood in Hanoi that the president will work with Congress in order to take the appropriate action if North Vietnam mounts an offensive which jeopardizes the stability of Indochina."

The shift in Nixon's attitude toward congressional involvement actually was more important than the warning to Hanoi, the officials said.

They repeated that the United States is virtually helpless in influencing events in Indochina following an order by Congress that ended U.S. bombing of Cambodia as of Wednesday.

ISLAND PPWC UNITS HIT IN IWA SUIT

VANCOUVER (CP) — The International Woodworkers of America Wednesday launched an action in British Columbia Supreme Court to have certification of a rival union quashed at three Vancouver Island operations.

John Laxton, representing the IWA, asked that the Labor Relations Board certification of the Pulp and Paper Workers of Canada at Ladysmith Forest Products, CIPA Lumber Co. and Mayo Lumber Co., both of Nanaimo, be quashed.

Laxton argued that the PPWC made misleading statements before the May 8 certification vote. He said these made the vote invalid.

The hearing continued today.

B.C. to Continue Holding Viet Funds

The provincial government will continue to withhold funds authorized by the legislature for medical aid for Vietnamese children until there is "some semblance of security" in Southeast Asia, Health Minister Dennis Cocke said today.

Cocke said the house committee for medical aid to Vietnamese children decided at a meeting Wednesday to make a new presentation to the legislature at it's Fall sitting in September.

He said no money has been sent to Vietnam out of the $2.25 million authorized by the legislature in February, but expects that some small amount could be on its way to the war-torn country before long.

The minister said the committee heard "so much conflicting evidence" Wednesday it has decided to wait before sending either funds or personnel to Vietnam.

"We certainly don't want to spend the taxpayers' money in this province in a frivolous way," Cocke said.

He said the conflicting testimony came from a number of volunteer groups working in Vietnam, some of whom said the situation there is stable, while others denied this.

Claire Culhane, former administrator at a Canadian hospital in Vietnam, had made some "very interesting observations," saying for instance that withholding money from Vietnamese children is tantamount to killing them.

"I said to her personally that conflicting evidence has created hesitancy on our part more than anything else," Cocke said.

He acknowledged that there are many volunteer groups who could use the province's money, but said: "Every one insists that the others are not doing a job. Who are you to believe?"

The minister said the committee decided that a new resolution will be presented to the legislature in the fall concerning the provincial government's aid to Vietnam.

ECONOMY FELLS AN OLD FIRM

HULL, Que. (CP) — The economic axe has fallen on a Canadian business more than 100 years old.

Walters Axe. Co. Ltd., the last axe-maker in the country, is no more.

"The reasons for closing were all economic," said former vice-president Elliot Levitan. "We couldn't compete with imports, mainly from China, Germany and Sweden."

The company was founded 105 years ago by Henry Walters, a cutlery maker from Sheffield, Eng., and ended up in the hands of Baker Brothers, scrap metal dealers.

During the company's peak year the advertising motto was:

"The tides may ebb and flow, but the lash of competitor's spray will never wash the name away—Walters Black Diamond Axe."

They once had 40 employees. When the company died there were six.

The National Museum of Science and Technology is preserving the machines and remaining products.

Plywood Plant Open Again After Dispute

VANCOUVER (CP) — Millwrights at MacMillan Bloedel Ltd.'s plywood division here returned to work with today's early-morning shift.

The company closed its mill at noon Tuesday, putting 1,000 men out of work, after 90 International Woodworkers of America millwrights booked off sick in a wage dispute.

Following a plant committee meeting Wednesday, the men agreed to return to work, starting with the midnight shift.

Visitor Breaks Ankle Running to Call Firemen

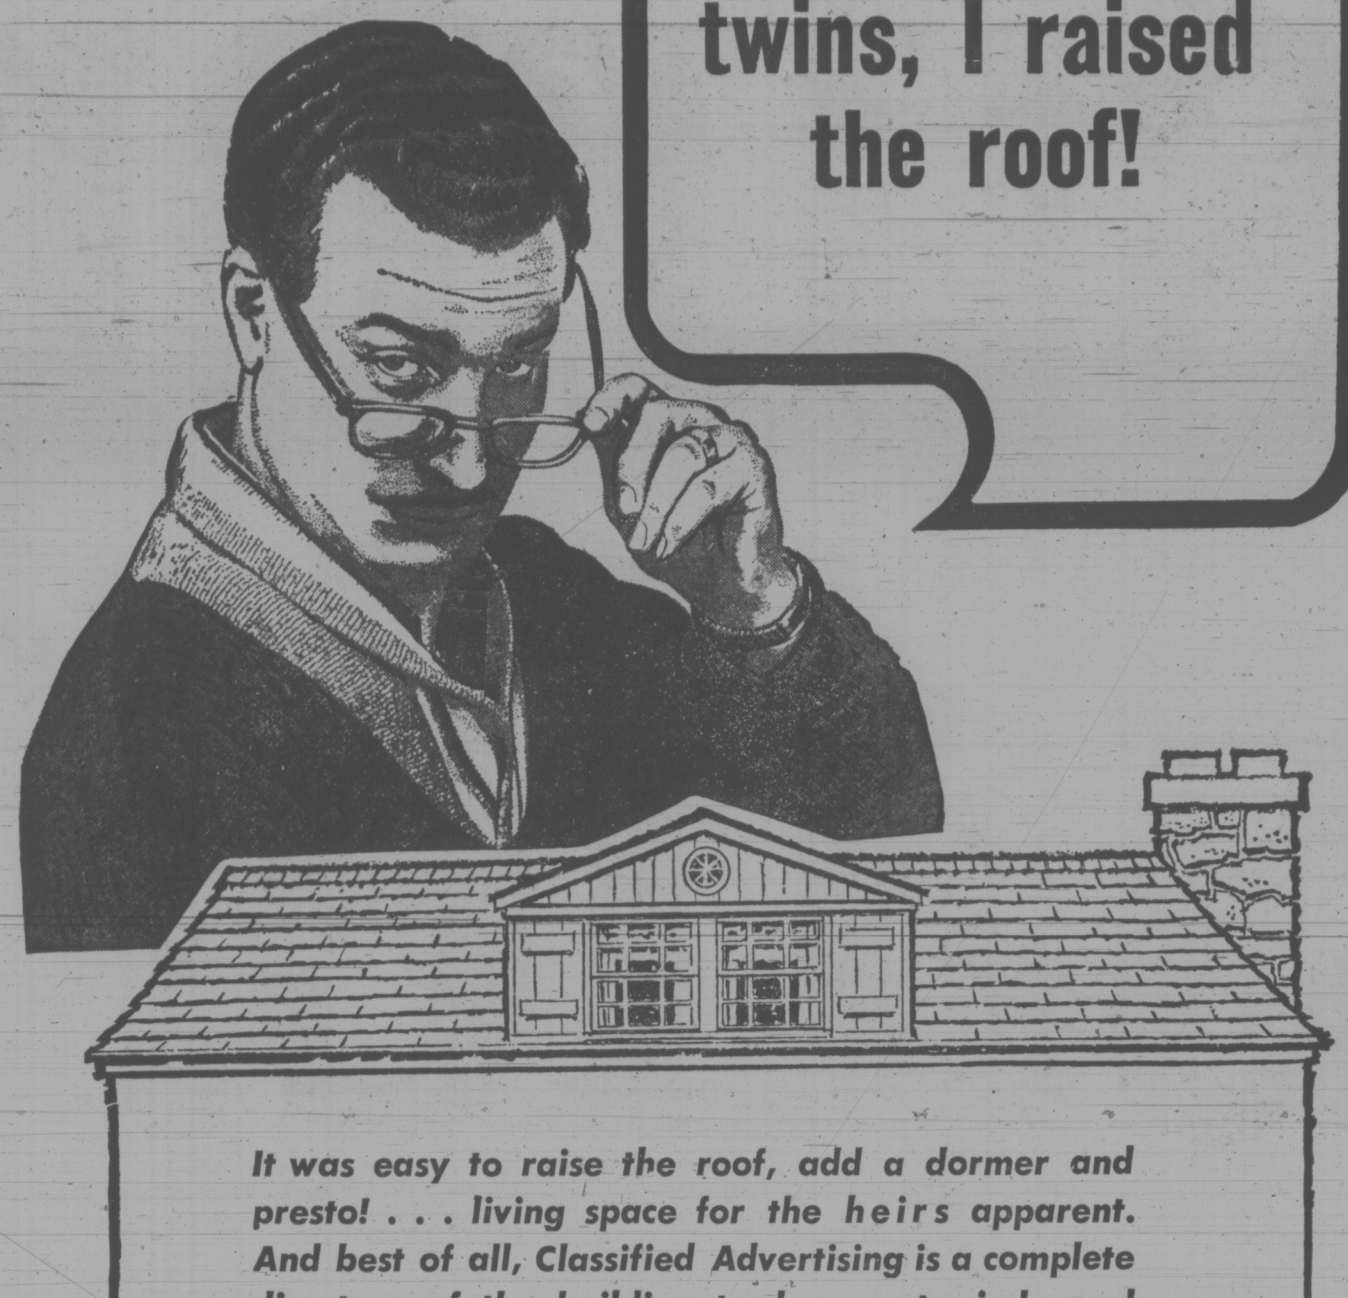

A fire in the electrical system of a car resulted in injury to a California visitor Wednesday evening.

Victoria police said today a car belonging to Murray Scheibe of Santa Barbara, Calif., caught fire at Government and Belleville.

Schiebe ran to a telephone booth to phone the fire department, tripped over a rock and broke his ankle.

He was treated at Victoria General Hospital and later released.

When my wife told me we were going to have twins, I raised the roof!

It was easy to raise the roof, add a dormer and presto! . . . living space for the heirs apparent. And best of all, Classified Advertising is a complete directory of the building trades, materials and workmen.

Mass Exodus Off Island

People resigned to six-hour wait at Swartz Bay ferry terminal

At hotels, motels and camp grounds around Vancouver Island, the exodus is on.

Tourists, especially those with cars or campers, are checking out early or cancelling reservation, for fear of being stuck on the Island during a long ferry strike.

A shutdown of B.C. Ferries Friday morning appears inevitable today despite a last-minute appeal from Transport Minister Robert Strachan.

Shortly after noon, it was announced Strachan and Norman Thornber, business agent for the marine branch (unlicensed) of the B.C. Government Employees Union, would meet in Strachan's office at 2 p.m.

The final decision will be made by 2,002 deck, catering and shore workers at terminal meetings before the first sailings in the morning.

"I expect that unless the attitude of the fleet changes drastically between now and Friday morning, there will be a complete withdrawal of services," said Thornber.

Massive line-ups developed this morning as thousands of tourists and others rushed to get off the island.

By late morning, traffic was backed up for six hours at Swartz Bay terminal. On other days this week, the line-up was an hour during the morning.

At Departure Bay near Nanaimo, an eight-hour wait was reported. "Everybody is afraid of being stranded," commented a terminal official.

On the mainland, Tsawwassen terminal said ferries were taking on full loads for the Island but traffic was "very light" compared with normal summer pressure.

At Horseshoe Bay, traffic was "quieter than normal" with any vehicle arriving within half an hour of departure making it on the ferry. Ferries were leaving with full loads.

Traffic waited four hours to get on the Black Ball vessel Coho to Port Angeles but manager Pat Frumento said it is always like this during the summer peak. He said ferry loads to Victoria are full.

Telephone lines were jammed all morning for Canadian Pacific's service to Port Angeles and Seattle and Washington State Ferries service between Anacortes and Sidney.

Tony Housdorff, owner of KOA camp ground on Mt. Newton Crossroad, had 135 camping units filled Wednesday night.

By mid-morning, all but 41 had checked out, virtually all of them because of the impending strike, he said.

"There's 25 other camp grounds in the area and they'll all be in the same situation, I'm sure," said Housedorff. He depends on good business for the last few weeks of August to make a profit at his business.

The Craigflower Motel had a 90 per cent checkout this morning, manager Doris Rasmussen said today. That's three times the normal rate.

As they left they told her, "We were going to stay but now we're scared," she said.

"I'd like to have Barrett in our office right now," said Mrs. Rasmussen.

Cheltenham Court Motel also experienced a morning exodus. More than one-third of the people who had just checked in, intending to stay several days, left early, a spokesman said.

"It's just going to be disastrous for hotels, motels, restaurants," said the manager of the Estrella Motel, who wouldn't give his name.

"The papers had put the fear of God in them," he said of the departing tourists. "It's going to affect thousands and thousands" of people dependent on the tourist trade.

A convention of 1,500 agriculturalists from across Canada was to arrive in the city Sunday, Mrs. Darien Bain, manager of the Windsor Court Motel, said. She's afraid they won't be able to come now.

"It's affected business drastically."

Sandy McEwan, front desk manager at the Empress Hotel, said: "Everybody is trying to get off the Island."

"They seem very worried," said McEwan. The hotel has had between 30 and 40 people checking out because of the ferry situation, plus cancellations.

Strachan sent a telegram to Thornber this morning saying that if all ferry crews, licensed and unlicensed, accept B.C. Ferries earlier offer with no interruption of service, no slowdown or work to rule, he would appoint a "top mediation officer" to make a "complete survey of the ferry situation."

"This man would meet crew representatives and list their grievances because manage-

A-G's Aide Loses Job

Gilbert Kennedy, B.C.'s deputy attorney-general for the last 16 years, was demoted by attorney-general Alex MacDonald Wednesday in what could be the first of a series of top-level civil service replacements.

Kennedy, 56, "has been offered" the position of associate deputy minister in the A-G's department, in charge of the administration of justice. He is being replaced by David L. Vickers, a Vancouver lawyer.

Speculation is spreading that Kennedy's demotion will start a chain of replacements of deputy ministers. It is expected that some present deputies will be offered lesser positions within their departments.

Names most commonly associated with the possible replacements are: Fraser MacLean in the transport department, John Stokes in forests, Tom Miard in highways, Les Hempsall in trade, Bill Sands in labor, David Borthwick in lands, Bill Smith in municipal affairs, and Valter Raudsepp in water resources.

The Times has learned that Ray Rickinson, deputy minister of human resources, will be replaced at the start of 1974. It is believed his job will be filled by Jim Sadler who is now assistant deputy minister.

Under questioning today, Premier Barrett conceded that the government is reviewing the personnel in all the categories of deputy ministers and associate deputy ministers.

"Now that these jobs have been opened into new categories, naturally we are going to review people in those categories," Barrett said. "That's the whole purpose of it."

Asked if it is the government's intention to bring in entirely new people to fill the top-echelon jobs in each departmental organization, Barrett said: "perhaps, perhaps."

Macdonald today didn't know if Kennedy would accept the new job but said: "I expect he will."

Kennedy was not available for comment.

Macdonald said Vickers, 38-year-old member of the Vancouver law firm of Ladner Downs, will serve as deputy for only two years, after which it is expected he will resume his law practice in Vancouver.

Macdonald said the appointment of Vickers is "a refreshing innovation but in no way a criticism of the dedication and capabilities of the legal officers of the department who have given and are continuing to give excellent service to the people of this province."

Vickers, married with four children, is a graduate of the University of B.C. and Sir George Williams University in Montreal. He is a former president of the Vancouver Bar Association, member of the national council of the Canadian Bar Association and chairman of the Legal Aid Society.

Vickers will receive a salary ranging from $39,000 to $42,000 per year. He will take over early in September.

Two orders-in-council passed by the cabinet June 27 of this year establish new salary levels and classifications for deputy ministers and associate deputies.

The deputy ministers' salaries range from $33,000 per year to $42,000. Associate deputies are to receive from $25,000 to $33,000.

RENT-A-CONCORDE SCHEME IN FRANCE

PARIS (Reuter) — France today annouced a plan that will enable international airlines to rent the Concorde supersonic airliner instead of buying it.

Finance Minister Valery Giscard Destaing said the government is setting up financial groupings to buy the Concorde and other French civilian aircraft and then lease them to airlines.

Officials at Aerospatiale, French builders of the Franco-British supersonic plane, welcomed the plan and expressed hope it will overcome Concorde's sales problems.

Under the leasing plan, airlines would be responsible for maintenance and insurance on the aircraft.

Current selling price of the Concorde is about $50 million a plane with spare parts.

Arab Hijacks Jet to Israel

Times News Services

TEL AVIV — A young Arab man hijacked a Middle East Airways flight today and forced it to land at Lod International Airport where specially trained Israeli security guards boarded it, freed the 119 passengers and crew and captured the hijacker without firing a shot, official Israeli sources said.

However, Lebanese sources in New York said it was actually another Israeli attempt to capture Palestinian guerrillas and that there were two "hijackers" who were actually Israeli secret agents. A Beirut airport source said the Israelis took four persons believed to be Palestinian guerrillas off the plane.

Israelis said the Boeing 707, owned by Lebanon, was hijacked over Cyprus on a flight from Libya to Lebanon. A flight of Israeli F-4 Phantom jets escorted the plane to the airport. Israeli troops had ringed the aircraft with armored personnel carriers, fire trucks and ambulances in case of emergency.

The hijacker, about 25 years old and dressed in a green suit, was led away from the 707 smiling broadly. His intentions remained a mystery. He had made no demands to Israeli authorities. No shots were fired during the rescue attempt, a military spokesman said, and no one was hurt.

There were unconfirmed reports he had requested political asylum.

In a related development, Israel warned the world today that despite condemnation from the United Nations Security Council, it will not let the rules of international law stand in the way of its hunt for Palestinian guerrilla leaders.

Gumboot Walkout By Dockers

VANCOUVER (CP) — Longshoremen remained off the job today despite an injunction instructing the longshoremen's union to order its members back to work.

Earlier in the day, Mr. Justice J. S. Atkins of the British Columbia Supreme Court issued the injunction against the union after a dispute over five pairs of gumboots shut down three-quarters of Vancouver's port activity Wednesday.

The dispute first arose in June when five longshoremen reported for work at the White Pass and Yukon dock to find they were to shovel salt, without having been given a protective-clothing notification.

This notification, which for salt means the wearing of gumboots, is supposed to be given in advance.

The five men refused to work, and White Pass demanded that they be punished. A mediator's ruling was interpreted differently by the two sides, and then the longshoremen's union claimed the five should be paid for the shift they didn't work.

The dispute blew up again Wednesday and shut down much of the waterfront when White Pass refused to accept any of the five when their names were put forward for work. Other longshoremen refused to work for White Pass, and the employers' association then stopped hiring altogether.

The sudden shutdown halted bulk exports of grain, coal, sulphur and potash.

Simple Truth Unshaken —Nixon

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon Wednesday night told the American people that two million words of Senate testimony have left unshaken the "simple truth" that he had no advance knowledge of the Watergate break-in and no part in its cover-up.

But he reiterated his refusal to turn over to Senate investigators or the Watergate prosecutors the tapes he says would exonerate him, arguing that any such disclosure would "cripple all future presidents" by exposing their private conversations to public scrutiny.

In a 30-minute radio-television address and an accompanying formal statement, the embattled chief executive acknowledged responsibility for "serious abuses" of both political ethics and national security procedures by some of his former White House and campaign aides.

But he said "the time has come to turn Watergate over to the courts," while he and the members of Congress "get on with the urgent business of our nation."

In a direct appeal to the voters — who last November gave him an historic election mandate but now tell pollsters they have lost confidence in his conduct in office — Nixon said:

"I ask for your help to insure that those who would exploit Watergate in order to keep us from doing what we were elected to do will not succeed."

Niether in the television talk, from his desk in the Oval Office of the White House, nor in the largely over-lapping formal statement that accompanied it did the president offer significant new details of his role in the Watergate case.

"The facts are complicated," he said, "and the evidence conflicting. It would not be right for me to try to sort out the evidence, to rebut specific witnesses, or to pronounce my own judgments about their credibility. That is for the committee and the courts."

Rather than attempting to rebut "the various charges in detail," Nixon underscored the contention of his previous major statements—on April 30 and May 22—that "I had no prior knowledge of the Watergate operation; (and) I neither took part in nor knew about any of the subsequent cover-up activities. . . ."

With the latest Gallup Poll showing that approval of his presidency has dropped to 31 per cent and that almost three-fourths of his constituents believe he knew either of the break-in plans or of the cover-up, Nixon bore down hard on his own defence.

"In all the millions of words of testimony" to the Senate investigating committee, he said, "there is not the slightest suggestion that I had any knowledge of the planning for the Watergate break-in."

PAPER LACK HITS WEEKEND

MONTREAL (CP) — Weekend Magazine, a color supplement carried in the Victoria Times and 20 other Canadian Newspapers, will not publish its Sept. 1 edition because of a shortage of newsprint due to strikes, William Goodson, president of Montreal Standard Publishing Co., said Wednesday.

Both the magazine's newsprint suppliers — Canadian International Paper (CIP) and Price Co. Ltd. — have been hit by strikes over new contracts.

Goodson said he did not know whether the magazine would be forced to cancel another issue in the future.

With the magazine's newsprint stockpile, the choice had to be made between cancelling either the Sept. 1 or the Sept. 8 edition, he said.

In Toronto, E. J. Mannion, president of Southstar Publishers Ltd., said Canadian Magazine, the weekend supplement carried by 14 newspapers also will not publish its Sept. 1 edition because of the newsprint problem.

FIRST SNOW REACHES B.C.

FORT ST. JOHN (CP) — It wasn't enough for skiers to unpack their gear but the snow — the first in months — fell in northwestern areas of Alberta and B.C. Wednesday night.

About one-half inch of rain and snow fell on Fort St. John, and a forestry station in he foothills 40 miles south of the town reported one inch of snow.

The weather office said the snowfall was caused by cool Arctic air moving south, bringing showers and high temperatures in the 50s.

Kingsview Move Stuns All Parties

By PAT DUFOUR

NORTH COWICHAN — Action taken by North Cowichan council Wednesday stunned both a developer who plans a massive housing development for Mount Tzouhalem at Maple Bay and residents opposed to his plan.

In a surprise move before a council chamber filled with about 70 people, council unanimously passed two readings of amendments of a land-use contract between the municipality and Kingsview Properties Ltd.

The move was the latest in one of the biggest controversies faced by North Cowichan which began when council declared the 505 acres a development area in December, preparing the way for a land-use contract with Kingsview.

Four public hearings have been held, each attended by irate Maple Bay Road residents, opposed to the housing development which they say will overlaod services and ruin the rural atmosphere of the area.

The opposing residents had the original land-use contract quashed in court earlier this year.

Wednesday, council gave a first reading to a land-use contract discussed at the public hearings and followed by giving two readings to the amendments.

Neither the developer nor the opposition had had an opportunity to see the amendments until immediately before the meeting. Both sides seemed stunned at the move.

Interviewed after the meeting, Mayor Gerry Smith said the amendments gave council more rigid control over the development and would cost the developer more money.

"It's going to cost the developer a lot of money," he said, "it's up to him whether he accepts it or not."

Contacted today, Kingsview president George Wilkinson said it will be at least a week before a decision to go ahead can be made.

"We are going to have to look at the changes of the economics of the development," he said. "They're now allowing us only single-family dwellings — no townhouses or apartments. They've also tacked on another 10 acres of parks and playgrounds. That's a fairly hefty chunk of money. They've also reduced the commercial area and moved it back where the townhouses were to be."

There were hisses and

SECOND SECTION

Only Twin Blow Could Cut Off Supply of Beef

Stormy Weather Bred B.C. Fleet

A shutdown of ferry service Friday between Vancouver Island and the mainland would be the second in the 13-year history of B.C. Ferries, the government fleet conceived amid a 1958 strike of two private ferry companies.

The first ferry strike, in mid 1958, was the most significant because one day before it occurred former Premier W. A. C. Bennett announced that a government ferry fleet would be built and service started between Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen.

He said then the action was taken as a result of the strike against Canadian Pacific ferries which began May 16, and the strike against Black Ball which occurred July 18.

Members of the Seafarers International Union went on strike May 16, 1958, against Canadian Pacific's 10 ships linking Victoria and Nanaimo with Vancouver.

Two days later, the Canadian Merchant Service Guild and the National Association of Marine Engineers voted to strike Black Ball, the only remaining ferry link, running between Nanaimo and Vancouver.

They later set a strike deadline of June 25. But the day before, the provincial government seized Black Ball under emergency measures contained in the Civil Defence Act.

Despite the takeover, reports circulated that officers and engineers would walk out anyway and on Friday, July 18 they did. The government ordered them back, but they refused. A court injunction was later issued and the men complied with it. The island was without ferries for four days.

Bennett, in announcing creation of a government ferry fleet the day before the Black Ball walkout, said:

"The government of B.C. is determined that in the future ferry connections between Vancouver Island and the mainland shall not be subject to the whim of union policy nor to the indifference of federal agencies."

And until 1968 he was right. And then, again on a Friday, this time Feb. 16, the ferry fleet was shut down when 800 deck, catering and shore workers—the unlicensed staff—refused to work.

The strike coincided with the dismissal from permanent positions of 160 persons as B.C. Ferries slashed weekend sailings by one-third.

The employees, members of the marine branch (unlicensed) of the B.C. Government Employees Association, protested not only the dismissals but also lack of job security, lack of meaningful seniority and absence of unemployment insurance.

The next day, 200 deck officers and engineers decided to join the strike.

The strike lasted 14 days and the settlement included creation of a six-man board to hear grievances and deal with working conditions and seniority with its findings to be binding; all laid off workers to return to the former status, a ban on further ferry tieups and wage parity with coastal shipping companies.

School Rolls Down 800

Greater Victoria's school population will decline by as much as 800 pupils this September.

Projected enrolment for the 1973-74 school year is 30,023 compared to 30,878 pupils registered last September at the district's 54 schools.

Most of the population decrease is at the elementary school level — the result of a declining birth rate in Victoria since the early 1960s — and some secondary schools are still expecting small increases in enrolment.

But while the pupil population is decreasing, school board officials are quick to point out that the teacher population is rising.

"With the drop in enrolment we would normally have not filled 20 teaching positions which were vacated," says Glenn Wall, associate director of instruction.

"But we replaced those 20 teachers and added 25 more. So we have 45 more than we would have had last year with this population," says Wall.

★

"One of the priorities of the (school) board is to improve the student-teacher ratio," he said.

British Columbia has traditionally had a poor student-teacher ratio average, with Vancouver recording the worst average of major cities across Canada.

In Victoria the ratio is officially 22.35 pupils per teacher, but school board officials admit the figure is not meaningful since it includes many adults who are not actually teaching in the classroom.

Victoria's ratio does not compare well with provinces such as Ontario or Quebec and it would be difficult to find a classroom in the city with less than 25 pupils.

Next year will improve, Wall says, adding that qualifications of the new teachers hired is exceptionally high.

More than 2,000 teachers applied for jobs in the district this year and only 136 have been hired so far.

Victoria receives a greater number of job applications than a district this size would normally receive, Wall says, perhaps because of its favorable climate and location.

There is no strict school board policy on the criteria for hiring teachers but experience is a major factor.

★

"We are often accused of hiring lesser qualified teachers but that's not the case," says Wall. "The greater percentage of those hired for this district next year have one to five years experience."

Some districts tend to hire teachers with fewer qualifications in order to save money.

"We do hire grads directly out of university as well," Wall says, "especially those in special subject areas. We want to get young and eager teachers but we want to strike a balance."

Experience outside the classroom is important, he says, so they look carefully at the summer jobs of university students.

"We like well-rounded people, says Wall.

The school district continues to recruit teachers both at the universities and in Vancouver during the school Easter vacation.

Meat dealers steer clear of alarm over supply for the Island

Victoria meat wholesalers today were concerned — but not alarmed — about the effects a B.C. Ferries strike might have upon the beef supply on Vancouver Island.

Industry spokesmen said the effects would be minor, unless the walkout was accompanied by a rotating strike against the CPR freight vessel, the Carrier Princess.

If both lines were closed, the flow of meat might be cut off.

Most wholesalers have supplies to last from 10 days to two weeks from the start of a strike, so it would take about 15 days of a simultaneous walkout to use up the supply.

A walkout against B.C. Ferries is possible Friday. There was no indication when the CPR vessel might be hit by another rotating strike.

A sudden shortage created by shipping strikes could temporarily raise prices, but these could be expected to fall to about present levels at the conclusion of the walkout.

The new concern arises at a time when stability appeared to be returning to the British Columbia meat industry.

Barring prolonged and simultaneous strikes, the industry expected wholesale and retail prices to stabilize at current levels.

There were small declines in prices at national livestock markets Wednesday.

Any drop in the wholesale price would take a week to 10 days to be reflected at the retail level.

Wholesale beef price in Victoria varies from $1.01 to $1.04 per pound but there is resistance to increases above that level.

On the other hand, there is no sign of a dramatic decline in the beef price, despite the federal government's move to restrict exports to the United States.

The Calgary Cattle Exchange headed off an attempt by ranchers to sell off large quantities of animals at what is believed to be the peak price.

When large shipments began to arrive on Monday, the exchange closed early. If the action had not been taken, the beef market would have been flooded with oversupply, possibly sending the price down 20 cents per pound.

The controlled buying pattern is expected to keep beef prices at about present levels for many weeks, with only the usual small fluctuations in response to supply and demand.

Victoria industry observers said the Calgary exchange had no choice but to control the purchase of cattle because it simply could not handle all the orders of ranchers wanting to sell at what they guessed would be the peak price, following the federal government's restrictions on sales to the United States.

The Canadian beef scare was a direct result of heavy exports to the U.S.

At the retail level, Victorians may see a slight decline in prices next month but no drop is anticipated in August.

The cattle markets were generally dull on the prairies today as ranchers adopt a wait-and-see attitude because prices did not fall sharply as anticipated.

The rush to market that occurred Monday has subsided. In Edmonton there were too few butcher cattle offered to establish a market.

Sales were a little more brisk in Winnipeg but most attention was centred on hogs where a record price of $70.15 a hundredweight was established.

Dairies to Up Cost Of Solid Products

Ice cream, sour cream, cottage cheese, yogurt and skim milk products are expected to increase in price next month.

The increases — probably one or two cents—are the result of producer price adjustments recently allowed by the federal government.

"We can't absorb the increase," said Fraser Valley Milk Producers' Association sales manager W. J. Aird, of Vancouver.

He declined to speculate how much the retail price of dairy goods would rise until the situation is examined in detail.

But he explained that when the federal government last week allowed a higher price to be asked by farmers and increased the government subsidy, it meant the balance has to be picked up by the manufacturer and hence the consumer.

This will mean price adjustments by not only direct-sales dairies, but also final processors such as ice cream stands.

One operator said when she last made an adjustment she reduced the quantity of ice cream in a 15-cent cone from 3½ to three ounces instead of raising the price.

Although the changes will not affect liquid milk prices at this time, those who buy powdered skim milk for mixing into table milk at home may find about one cent a quart difference in price.

GIRL KILLED, SISTERS HURT

A Saanich girl was killed and her three sisters injured when their car tore through a guard rail and down an embankment on the Malahat late Wednesday night.

Colwood RCMP siad today Lena Anderssen, 16, of 2225 Greenlands, was proncounced dead on arrival at Victoria General Hospital.

One of the sisters, Kersti, 20, is in critical condition with head injuries. Herdis, 17, is in fair condition, while 13-year-old Kari-Anne is in good condition.

Police said injuries included a broken leg, chest and head injuries.

Details of the crash were sketchy, but police said only one car was involved. It is not known which of the four sisters was driving.

The accident occured at the top of Tunnel Hill, 1½ miles north of Goldstream Park and 14 miles from Victoria.

'Voracious Appetite' For Heroin Won't Ease

A Victoria man with a "voracious appetite" for heroin admitted today to a rash of break-ins in the Saanich area over the last 10 days.

Allan Scott Alexander, 21, of 511 Davida, pleaded guilty in Victoria provincial court today to seven break-ins, the profits of which supported his three-capsule-a-day heroin habit.

Police said one capsule of heroin sells for between $35-$50.

The first break-in took place Aug. 6 when Alexander broke into a service station and stole $27 from a pop machine, a cigarette machine and the cash register.

Alexander was caught red-handed by Saanich police early today as he was prying open a cigarette machine at another gas station.

A Saanich police officer testified that Alexander had netted a total of $220 from the seven break-ins.

Judge William Ostler remanded the case until Aug. 30 for a pre-sentence report and sentence. Alexander will remain in custody until that time.

"You have a voracious appetite for heroin and whether you want to or not, you are likely to turn to crime to support it," Ostler said.

In another case, a man who tried to move his motorcycle around a corner must spend the next 15 weekends in jail.

Gordon Howard Harris, 21, of 1246 Montrose, was stopped by police on Douglas Street Aug. 2 and given a roadside suspension.

An hour later, police saw Harris riding his motorcycle.

Harris told Judge Ostler his bike was worth $3,000 and he only wanted to ride it around the corner to a safer place.

Ostler told Harris he would impose a weekend jail sentence so it would not interrupt Harris' studies at Camosun College.

Trial Ordered For Morrison

A Victoria man has been committed for trial in a higher court on a charge of capital murder after a preliminary hearing Wednesday afternoon.

Royden Gaylord Morrison, 42, of 132 Dallas, is charged with the March 14 stabbing of Wallace Omar Stephenson, 51, also of 132 Dallas.

A charge of non-capital murder against Morrison was dropped during the preliminary hearing before Judge Edmond St. Jorre.

History Repeated—at $2.61 an Hour

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

In a busy classroom at Mount Douglas Secondary School 15 students are assembling their version of the history of Victoria.

They have discovered that a cougar was shot on the site of James Bay's Beckley Farm on Christmas Day in 1903.

The guns at Fort Rodd Hill have never been fired in anger, the students learned, and the cannons were mainly used to try to impress the local Indians.

Samuel Maclure built more than 100 of his majestic homes in Victoria around the turn of the century and most of them are still standing.

The provincial government is paying the students $2.61 an hour for their research during the six-week project which is one of hundreds of special student employment projects sponsored across B.C.

Total cost of province-wide scheme is $959,000.

The Mount Douglas program is under the direction of teachers Shirley Bell and Brian Cornall, who had already received school board grants to prepare instruction kits on Victoria's history.

After researching at the provincial and city archives, at various libraries and private collections, and at historic sites in the city, the students are preparing 21 teaching kits on aspects of Victoria's history.

The topics range from urban development studies on James Bay, Oak Bay and Old Town to histories of transportation, architecture and the military in the city.

Each kit will include visual aids such as maps, pictures and slides, as well as written material, copies of old newspaper clippings, suggested field trips and assignments, and some audio-visual tapes.

The students' work will be submitted to Greater Victoria school board which will make copies of the kits for use by elementary and secondary teachers throughout the city.

Miss Bell says she hopes other centres in the province will conduct similar projects during the summer and eventually an exchange of research material can be worked out.

"History is dull and dry the way they teach it now," says Debby Wilson, one of the students working on the Mt. Doug program.

The visual aids and field trips included in the kits will hopefully make history more meaningful, Debby says.

By studying history close at hand, the students feel school children will have a chance to see how history happens and how much the past influences life in the city today.

"History doesn't appeal to people because it's made so boring," says another student, Graham Fligg.

"Now we've learned the teachers' point of view as well," Graham said, adding that the students have learned some of the techniques of researching.

The Mt. Doug project is one of 15 in Victoria which will cost the provincial government $42,326 plus 10 per cent payroll costs.

Sixty students, all Grade 12 graduates who will go on to post-secondary studies, are employed in the projects which are mainly designed to collect and prepare instructional aids for schools.

Those projects include preparation of metric conversion charts, consumer education and textile kits, B.C. history materials, social studies and biology collections.

Four students have been working with pupils at Victor School for the mentally retarded; two have been operating libraries at various elementary schools in the district and another student has been assisting in office functions at the school board.

Mass Exodus Off Island

At hotels, motels and camp grounds around Vancouver Island, the exodus is on.

Tourists, especially those with cars or campers, are checking out early or cancelling reservations, for fear of being stuck on the Island during a long ferry strike.

A shutdown of B.C. Ferries Friday morning appears inevitable today despite a last-minute appeal from Transport Minister Robert Strachan.

But shortly after noon, it was announced Strachan and Norman Thornber, business agent for the marine branch (unlicensed) of the B.C. Government Employees Union, would meet in Strachan's office at 2 p.m.

The final decision will be made by 2,000 deck, catering and shore workers at terminal meetings before the first sailings in the morning.

"I expect that unless the attitude of the fleet changes drastically between now and Friday morning, there will be a complete withdrawal of services," said Thornber.

Massive line-ups developed this morning as thousands of tourists and others rushed to get off the island.

By late morning, traffic was backed up for six hours at Swartz Bay terminal. On other days this week, the line-up was an hour during the morning.

At Departure Bay near Nanaimo, an eight-hour wait was reported. "Everybody is afraid of being stranded," commented a terminal official.

On the mainland, Tsawwassen terminal said ferries were taking on full loads for the Island but traffic was "very light" compared with normal summer pressure.

At Horseshoe Bay, traffic was "quieter than normal" with any vehicle arriving within half an hour of departure making it on the ferry. Ferries were leaving with full loads.

Traffic waited four hours to get on the Black Ball vessel Coho to Port Angeles but manager Pat Frumento said it is always like this during the summer peak. He said ferry loads to Victoria are full.

Telephone lines were jammed all morning for Canadian Pacific's service to Port Angeles and Seattle and Washington State Ferries service between Anacortes and Sidney.

Tony Housdorff, owner of KOA camp ground on Mt. Newton Crossroad, had 135 camping units filled Wednesday night.

By mid-morning, all but 41 had checked out, virtually all of them because of the impending strike, he said.

"There's 25 other camp grounds in the area and they'll all be in the same situation, I'm sure," said Housedorff. He depends on good business for the last few weeks of August to make a profit at his business.

The Craigflower Motel had a 90 per cent checkout this morning, manager Doris Rasmussen said today. That's three times the normal rate.

As they left they told her, "We were going to stay but now we're scared," she said.

"I'd like to have Barrett in our office right now," said Mrs. Rasmussen.

Cheltenham Court Motel also experienced a morning exodus. More than one-third of the people who had just checked in, intending to stay several days, left early, a spokesman said.

"It's just going to be disastrous for hotels, motels, restaurants," said the manager of the Estrella Motel, who wouldn't give his name.

"The papers had put the fear of God in them," he said of the departing tourists. "It's going to affect thousands and thousands" of people dependent on the tourist trade.

A convention of 1,500 agriculturalists from across Canada was to arrive in the city Sunday, Mrs. Darien Bain, manager of the Windsor Court Motel, said. She's afraid they won't be able to come now.

"It's affected business drastically."

Sandy McEwan, front desk manager at the Empress Hotel, said: "Everybody is trying to get off the Island."

"They seem very worried," said McEwan. The hotel has had between 30 and 40 people checking out because of the ferry situation, plus cancellations.

Strachan sent a telegram to Thornber this morning saying that if all ferry crews, licensed and unlicensed, accept B.C. Ferries earlier offer with no interruption of service, no slowdown or work to rule, he would appoint a "top mediation officer" to make a "complete survey of the ferry situation."

"This man would meet crew representatives and list their grievances and complaints," said the telegram.

"He would also meet ferry management and list their grievances because manage-

A-G's Aide Loses Job

Gilbert Kennedy, B.C.'s deputy attorney-general for the last 16 years, was demoted by attorney-general Alex MacDonald Wednesday in what could be the first of a series of top-level civil service replacements.

Kennedy, 56, "has been offered" the position of associate deputy minister in the A-G's department, in charge of the administration of justice. He is being replaced by David L. Vickers, a Vancouver lawyer.

Speculation is spreading that Kennedy's demotion will start a chain of replacements of deputy ministers. It is expected that some present deputies will be offered lesser positions within their departments.

Names most commonly associated with the possible replacements are: Fraser MacLean in the transport department, John Stokes in forests, Tom Miard in highways, Les Hempsall in trade, Bill Sands in labor, David Borthwick in lands, Ken Smith in municipal affairs, and Valter Raudsepp in water resources.

The Times has learned that Ray Rickinson, deputy minister of human resources, will be replaced at the start of 1974. It is believed his job will be filled by Jim Sadler who is now assistant deputy minister.

Under questioning today, Premier Barrett conceded that the government is reviewing the personnel in all the categories of deputy ministers and associate deputy ministers.

"Now that these jobs have been opened into new categories, naturally we are going to review people in those categories," Barrett said. "That's the whole purpose of it."

Asked if it is the government's intention to bring in entirely new people to fill the top-echelon jobs in each departmental organization, Barrett said: "perhaps, perhaps."

Macdonald today didn't know if Kennedy would accept the new job but said: "I expect he will."

Kennedy was not available for comment.

Macdonald said Vickers, 38-year-old member of the Vancouver law firm of Ladner Downs, will serve as deputy for only two years, after which it is expected he will resume his law practice in Vancouver.

Macdonald said the appointment of Vickers is "a refreshing innovation but in no way a criticism of the dedication and capabilities of the legal officers of the department who have given and are continuing to give excellent service to the people of this province."

Vickers, married with four children, is a graduate of the University of B.C. and Sir George Williams University in Montreal. He is a former president of the Vancouver Bar Association, member of the national council of the Canadian Bar Association and chairman of the Legal Aid Society.

Vickers will receive a salary ranging from $39,000 to $42,000 per year. He will take over early in September.

Two orders-in-council passed by the cabinet June 27 of this year establish new salary levels and classifications for deputy ministers and associate deputies.

The deputy ministers' salaries range from $33,000 per year to $42,000. Associate deputies are to receive from $25,000 to $33,000.

RENT-A-CONCORDE SCHEME IN FRANCE

PARIS (Reuter) — France today annouced a plan that will enable international airlines to rent the Concorde supersonic airliner instead of buying it.

Finance Minister Valery Giscard D'Estaing said the government is setting up financial groupings to buy the Concorde and other French civilian aircraft and then lease them to airlines.

Officials at Aerospatiale, French builders of the Franco-British supersonic plane, welcomed the plan and expressed hope it will overcome Concorde's sales problems.

Under the leasing plan, airlines would be responsible for maintenance and insurance on the aircraft.

Current selling price of the Concorde is about $50 million a plane with spare parts.

Arab Hijacks Jet to Israel

Times News Services

TEL AVIV — A young Arab man hijacked a Middle East Airways flight today and forced it to land at Lod International Airport where specially trained Israeli security guards boarded it, freed the 119 passengers and crew and captured the hijacker without firing a shot, official Israeli sources said.

However, Lebanese sources in New York said it was actually another Israeli attempt to capture Palestinian guerrillas and that there were two "hijackers" who were actually Israeli secret agents. A Beirut airport source said the Israelis took four persons believed to be Palestinian guerrillas off the plane.

Israelis said the Boeing 707, owned by Lebanon, was hijacked over Cyprus on a flight from Libya to Lebanon. A flight of Israeli F-4 Phantom jets escorted the plane to the airport. Israeli troops had ringed the aircraft with armored personnel carriers, fire trucks and ambulances in case of emergency.

The hijacker, about 25 years old and dressed in a green suit, was led away from the red, white and blue Boeing 707 smiling broadly. His intentions remained a mystery. He had made no demands to Israeli authorities. No shots were fired during the rescue attempt, a military spokesman said, and no one was hurt.

There were unconfirmed reports he had requested political asylum.

In a related development, Israel warned the world today that despite condemnation from the United Nations Security Council, it will not let the rules of international law stand in the way of its hunt for Palestinian guerrilla leaders.

Gumboot Walkout Continues

VANCOUVER (CP) — Longshoremen remained off the job today despite an injunction instructing the longshoremen's union to order its members back to work.

Earlier in the day, Mr. Justice J. S. Atkins of the British Columbia Supreme Court issued the injunction against the union after a dispute over five pairs of gumboots shut down three-quarters of Vancouver's port activity Wednesday.

The dispute first arose in June when five longshoremen reported for work at the White Pass and Yukon dock to find they were to shovel salt, without having been given a protective-clothing notification.

This notification, which for salt means the wearing of gumboots, is supposed to be given in advance.

The five men refused to work, and White Pass demanded that they be punished. A mediator's ruling was interpreted differently by the two sides, and then the longshoremen's union claimed the five should be paid for the shift they didn't work.

The dispute blew up again Wednesday and shut down much of the waterfront when White Pass refused to accept any of the five when their names were put forward for work. Other longshoremen refused to work for White Pass, and the employers' association then stopped hiring altogether.

The sudden shutdown halted bulk exports of grain, coal, sulphur and potash.

Simple Truth Unshaken —Nixon

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon Wednesday night told the American people that two million words of Senate testimony have left unshaken the "simple truth" that he had no advance knowledge of the Watergate break-in and no part in its cover-up.

But he reiterated his refusal to turn over to Senate investigators or the Watergate prosecutors the tapes he says would exonerate him, arguing that any such disclosure would "cripple all future presidents" by exposing their private conversations to public scrutiny.

In a 30-minute radio-television address and an accompanying formal statement, the embattled chief executive acknowledged responsibility for "serious abuses" of both political ethics and national security procedures by some of his former White House and campaign aides.

But he said "the time has come to turn Watergate over to the courts," while he and the members of Congress "get on with the urgent business of our nation."

In a direct appeal to the voters — who last November gave him an historic election mandate but now tell pollsters they have lost confidence in his conduct in office — Nixon said:

"I ask for your help to insure that those who would exploit Watergate in order to keep us from doing what we were elected to do will not succeed."

Niether in the television talk, from his desk in the Oval Office of the White House, nor in the largely over-lapping formal statement that accompanied it did the president offer significant new details of his role in the Watergate case.

"The facts are complicated," he said, "and the evidence conflicting. It would not be right for me to try to sort out the evidence, to rebut specific witnesses, or to pronounce my own judgments about their credibility. That is for the committee and the courts."

Rather than attempting to rebut "the various charges in detail," Nixon underscored the contention of his previous major statements—on April 30 and May 22—that "I had no prior knowledge of the Watergate operation; (and) I neither took part in nor knew about any of the subsequent cover-up activities. . . ."

With the latest Gallup Poll showing that approval of his presidency has dropped to 31 per cent and that almost three-fourths of his constituents believe he knew either of the break-in plans or of the cover-up, Nixon bore down hard on his own defence.

"In all the millions of words of testimony" to the Senate investigating committee, he said, "there is not the slightest suggestion that I had any knowledge of the planning for the Watergate break-in."

PAPER LACK HITS WEEKEND

MONTREAL (CP) — Weekend Magazine, a color supplement carried in the Victoria Times and 20 other Canadian Newspapers, will not publish its Sept. 1 edition because of a shortage of newsprint due to strikes, William Goodson, president of Montreal Standard Publishing Co., said Wednesday.

Both the magazine's newsprint suppliers — Canadian International Paper (CIP) and Price Co. Ltd. — have been hit by strikes over new contracts.

Goodson said he did not know whether the magazine would be forced to cancel another issue in the future.

With the magazine's newsprint stockpile, the choice had to be made between cancelling either the Sept. 1 or the Sept. 8 edition, he said.

In Toronto, E. J. Mannion, president of Southstar Publishers Ltd., said Canadian Magazine, the weekend supplement carried by 14 newspapers also will not publish its Sept. 1 edition because of the newsprint problem.

FIRST SNOW REACHES B.C.

FORT ST. JOHN (CP) — It wasn't enough for skiers to unpack their gear but the snow — the first in months — fell in northwestern areas of Alberta and in B.C. Wednesday night.

About one-half inch of rain and snow fell on Fort St. John, and a forestry station in the foothills 40 miles south of the town reported one inch of snow.

The weather office said the snowfall was caused by cool Arctic air moving south, bringing showers and high temperatures in the 50s.

Kingsview Move Stuns All Parties

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

NORTH COWICHAN — Action taken by North Cowichan council Wednesday stunned both a developer who plans a massive housing development for Mount Tzouhalem at Maple Bay and residents opposed to his plan.

In a surprise move before a council chamber filled with about 70 people, council unanimously passed two readings of amendments of a land-use contract between the municipality and Kingsview Properties Ltd.

The move was the latest in one of the biggest controversies faced by North Cowichan which began when council declared the 505 acres a development area in December, preparing the way for a land-use contract with Kingsview.

Four public hearings have been held, each attended by irate Maple Bay Road residents, opposed to the housing development which they say will overload services and ruin the rural atmosphere of the area.

The opposing residents had the original land-use contract quashed in court earlier this year.

Wednesday, council gave a first reading to a land-use contract discussed at the public hearings and followed by giving two readings to the amendments.

Neither the developer nor the opposition had had an opportunity to see the amendments until immediately before the meeting. Both sides seemed stunned at the move.

Interviewed after the meeting, Mayor Gerry Smith said the amendments gave council more rigid control over the development and would cost the developer more money.

"It's going to cost the developer a lot of money," he said, "it's up to him whether he accepts it or not."

Judges Remove Selves From Hearing Agnew Case

BALTIMORE (WP) — The entire panel of U.S. district court judges here disqualified themselves Wednesday from handling any portion of a grand jury investigation into political corruption that might involve Vice-President Spiro Agnew.

Judge Edward Northrup, chief judge of the U.S. district court in Maryland, said the decision had been made by the nine judges "because of the unique position of the vice-president and his relationship to the state of Maryland." Agnew was Baltimore county executive, then governor of Maryland before being elected vice-president.

The chief judge said that all six judges who attended a two-hour meeting Wednesday, including himself, had agreed they were connected in some way with the vice-president's political career and all said they preferred to step away from the Agnew portion of the case.

Northrup said he conferred by phone Tuesday with chief judge Clement Haynsworth of the fourth U.S. circuit court of appeals and Haynsworth agreed to appoint a judge from outside Maryland to handle any matters in the grand jury investigation pertaining to Agnew.

The judge appointed by Haynsworth would have jurisdiction over any questions of executive privelege or separation of powers that might arise, Northrup said.

The vice-president was notified Aug. 1 that he was under investigation by a special federal grand jury for possible tax fruad, extortion, bribery and conspiracy violations. Agnew denied the charges during a press conference last week.

So far in the investigation, constitutional questions apparently have not arisen because Agnew has agreed through his attorneys to make available his personal financial records and by consenting to be questioned by investigators from Beall's office.

Agnew, Tuesday, made clear that he was granting access only to his personal financial and income tax records sought by the prosecutor and not the official records of the vice-president.

"There haven't been any sensitive matters pertaining to the vice-president that have arisen so far," Northrup said. "I hope to hell there aren't."

Northrup referred to the outside judge's duties in the investigation as those of "a fireman waiting for the bell to ring."

The decision to ask for appointment of an outsider to the case was made, he said, after reports were published that the judge now assigned to oversee the grand jury investigation, Stanley Blair, was removed because of his previous connections with Agnew.

Blair, the newest of the Maryland district's nine judges, was Maryland secretary of state under Agnew and later served as Agnew's chief of staff in Washington when Agnew became vice-president.

Northrup denied that Blair had been replaced but said the judge had requested his own removal from the case at Wednesday's meeting of the district's judges.

Agnew, speaking in Denver in his first public appearance since the investigation broke Wednesday night stoutly defended Nixon's right—and by inference his own—to fight back against his critics and accusers.

Without mentioning either Nixon's Watergate troubles or his own difficulties, Agnew told the 24th convention of the International Boilermakers' Union:

"Whether you voted for him (Nixon) or his opponent, I believe that you respect his right to carry out the job he was elected to do. And right now, ladies and gentlemen, he needs your support in carrying out that job."

Halperin Wiretap Admitted

WASHINGTON (WP) — The U.S. justice department admitted Wednesday that it placed a wiretap on the home telephone of former White House aide Morton Halperin for 21 months, but it said it did so lawfully to protect national security.

In a response to a lawsuit filed against the government by Halperin, the department argued that the wiretaps placed on Halperin's telephone between May 12, 1969, and Feb. 10, 1971, were requested by Henry Kissinger, national security adviser, to pinpoint leaks of classified material.

Halperin, formerly an aide to Kissinger and now a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution here, has asked the U.S. district court to penalize Kissinger and 10 other defendants $100 a day for tapping his phone.

Each of the defendants could be assessed damages up to $75,000 for a total of $825,000 under the terms of a wiretap statute in the 1968 Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act.

PRESIDENT WON'T REVEAL NOTES ON THE MILK MEN

WASHINGTON (WP) — The Nixon administration contended Wednesday that inspection of White House papers by the judiciary — even in secret — would "do irreparable injury to the principle of the separation of powers."

Moving to protect the White House's flanks on the contested doctrine of executive privilege, justice department lawyers made the argument in a last-minute effort to block production of some 67 official memos concerning the dairy industry and the government's controversial 1971 increase in milk price supports.

U.S. district court judge William Jones had ordered the government to submit the documents today for his private inspection. The papers are being sought by consumer groups who charged in a lawsuit filed last year that the higher price supports were a payoff for early contributions to Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign.

The government asked for a stay of Judge Jones' order so that the decision could be contested before the U.S. circuit court of appeals here.

Compliance with Judge Jones' ruling, the government lawyers suggested, could also compromise the president's claims of executive privilege in the face of subpoenas by special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox and the senate Watergate investigating committee.

Overriding White House protests in the milk fund case after a July 27 hearing, Judge Jones ruled that the documents involving the dairy industry should be submitted to him so that he could determine which ones, if any, should be handed over to the consumer groups pressing the lawsuit.

A similar solution has been proposed by special Watergate prosecutor Cox.

Long Beach

British Columbia's Precious Gem of the Ocean

Between the fishing village of Tofino and Ucluelet, 20 miles apart on the west coast of Vancouver Island, there extends one of the most spectacular beaches in the province. It is, of course, Long Beach which has, in one unbroken stretch, 12 miles of fine white sand, hard packed and up to half a mile wide at low tide.

Here is a gem of a beach that offers a wide-open view of the Pacific; a beach on which long feathery breakers murmur exquisite language to the silver sand.

The waters are cold and in some areas treacherous, but the beauty of the scenery, the thrill of digging for razor clams and the fascinating foreshore combine to make a trip to Long Beach a memorable occasion.

For your expedition to Long Beach what better way to travel than in a camper, trailer, or motor home. Check today's Classified for an exciting selection of new and used makes and models.

Mass Exodus Off Island

At hotels, motels and camp grounds around Vancouver Island, the exodus is on.

Tourists, especially those with cars or campers, are checking out early or cancelling reservations, for fear of being stuck on the Island during a long ferry strike.

A shutdown of B.C. Ferries Friday morning appears inevitable today despite a last-minute appeal from Transport Minister Robert Strachan.

But shortly after noon, it was announced Strachan and Norman Thornber, business agent for the marine branch (unlicensed) of the B.C. Government Employees Union, would meet in Strachan's office at 2 p.m.

The final decision will be made by 2,000 deck, catering and shore workers at terminal meetings before the first sailings in the morning.

"I expect that unless the attitude of the fleet changes drastically between now and Friday morning, there will be a complete withdrawal of services," said Thornber.

Massive line-ups developed this morning as thousands of tourists and others rushed to get off the island.

By late morning, traffic was backed up for six hours at Swartz Bay terminal. On other days this week, the line-up was an hour during the morning.

At Departure Bay near Nanaimo, an eight-hour wait was reported. "Everybody is afraid of being stranded," commented a terminal official.

On the mainland, Tsawwassen terminal said ferries were taking on full loads for the Island but traffic was "very light" compared with normal summer pressure.

At Horseshoe Bay, traffic was "quieter than normal" with any vehicle arriving within half an hour of departure making it on the ferry. Ferries were leaving with full loads.

Traffic waited four hours to get on the Black Ball vessel Coho to Port Angeles but manager Pat Frumento said it is always like this during the summer peak. He said ferry loads to Victoria are full.

Telephone lines were jammed all morning for Canadian Pacific's service to Port Angeles and Seattle and Washington State Ferries service between Anacortes and Sidney.

Tony Housdorff, owner of KOA camp ground on Mt. Newton Crossroad, had 135 camping units filled Wednesday night.

By mid-morning, all but 41 had checked out, virtually all of them because of the impending strike, he said.

"There's 25 other camp grounds in the area and they'll all be in the same situation, I'm sure," said Housedorff. He depends on good business for the last few weeks of August to make a profit at his business.

The Craigflower Motel had a 90 per cent checkout this morning, manager Doris Rasmussen said today. That's three times the normal rate.

As they left they told her, "We were going to stay but now we're scared," she said.

"I'd like to have Barrett in our office right now," said Mrs. Rasmussen.

Cheltenham Court Motel also experienced a morning exodus. More than one-third of the people who had just checked in, intending to stay several days, left early, a spokesman said.

"It's just going to be disastrous for hotels, motels, restaurants," said the manager of the Estrella Motel, who wouldn't give his name.

"The papers had put the fear of God in them," he said of the departing tourists. "It's going to affect thousands and thousands" of people dependent on the tourist trade.

A convention of 1,500 agriculturalists from across Canada was to arrive in the city Sunday, Mrs. Darien Bain, manager of the Windsor Court Motel, said. She's afraid they won't be able to come now.

"It's affected business drastically."

Sandy McEwan, front desk manager at the Empress Hotel, said: "Everybody is trying to get off the Island."

"They seem very worried," said McEwan. The hotel has had between 30 and 40 people checking out because of the ferry situation, plus cancellations.

Strachan sent a telegram to Thornber this morning saying that if all ferry crews, licensed and unlicensed, accept B.C. Ferries earlier offer with no interruption of service, no slowdown or work to rule, he would appoint a "top mediation officer" to make a "complete survey of the ferry situation."

"This man would meet crew representatives and list their grievances and complaints," said the telegram.

"He would also meet ferry management and list their grievances because manage-

FIRST SNOW REACHES B.C.

FORT ST. JOHN (CP) — It wasn't enough for skiers to unpack their gear but the snow — the first in months — fell in northwestern areas of Alberta and in B.C. Wednesday night.

About one-half inch of rain and snow fell on Fort St. John, and a forestry station in the foothills 40 miles south of the town reported one inch of snow.

The weather office said the snowfall was caused by cool Arctic air moving south, bringing showers and high temperatures in the 50s.

A-G's Aide Loses Job

Gilbert Kennedy, B.C.'s deputy attorney-general for the last 16 years, was demoted by attorney-general Alex MacDonald Wednesday in what could be the first of a series of top-level civil service replacements.

Kennedy, 56, "has been offered" the position of associate deputy minister in the A-G's department, in charge of the administration of justice. He is being replaced by David L. Vickers, a Vancouver lawyer.

Speculation is spreading that Kennedy's demotion will start a chain of replacements of deputy ministers. It is expected that some present deputies will be offered lesser positions within their departments.

Names most commonly associated with the possible replacements are: Fraser MacLean in the transport department, John Stokes in forests, Tom Miard in highways, Les Hempsall in trade, Bill Sands in labor, David Borthwick in lands, Ken Smith in municipal affairs, and Valter Raudsepp in water resources.

The Times has learned that Ray Rickinson, deputy minister of human resources, will be replaced at the start of 1974. It is believed his job will be filled by Jim Sadler who is now assistant deputy minister.

Under questioning today, Premier Barrett conceded that the government is reviewing the personnel in all the categories of deputy ministers and associate deputy ministers.

"Now that these jobs have been opened into new categories, naturally we are going to review people in those categories," Barrett said. "That's the whole purpose of it."

Asked if it is the government's intention to bring in entirely new people to fill the top-echelon jobs in each departmental organization, Barrett said: "perhaps, perhaps."

Macdonald today didn't know if Kennedy would accept the new job but said: "I expect he will."

Kennedy was not available for comment.

Macdonald said Vickers, 38-year-old member of the Vancouver law firm of Ladner Downs, will serve as deputy for only two years, after which it is expected he will resume his law practice in Vancouver.

Macdonald said the appointment of Vickers is "a refreshing innovation but in no way a criticism of the dedication and capabilities of the legal officers of the department who have given and are continuing to give excellent service to the people of this province."

Vickers, married with four children, is a graduate of the University of B.C. and Sir George Williams University in Montreal. He is a former president of the Vancouver Bar Association, member of the national council of the Canadian Bar Association and chairman of the Legal Aid Society.

Vickers will receive a salary ranging from $39,000 to $42,000 per year. He will take over early in September.

Two orders-in-council passed by the cabinet June 27 of this year establish new salary levels and classifications for deputy ministers and associate deputies.

The deputy ministers' salaries range from $33,000 per year to $42,000. Associate deputies are to receive from $25,000 to $33,000.

RENT-A-CONCORDE SCHEME IN FRANCE

PARIS (Reuter) — France today annouced a plan that will enable international airlines to rent the Concorde supersonic airliner instead of buying it.

Finance Minister Valery Giscard D'Estaing said the government is setting up financial groupings to buy the Concorde and other French civilian aircraft and then lease them to airlines.

Officials at Aerospatiale, French builders of the Franco-British supersonic plane, welcomed the plan and expressed hope it will overcome Concorde's sales problems.

Under the leasing plan, airlines would be responsible for maintenance and insurance on the aircraft.

Current selling price of the Concorde is about $50 million a plane with spare parts.

Arab Hijacks Jet to Israel

Times News Services

TEL AVIV — A young Arab man hijacked a Middle East Airways flight today and forced it to land at Lod International Airport where specially trained Israeli security guards boarded it, freed the 119 passengers and crew and captured the hijacker without firing a shot, official Israeli sources said.

However, Lebanese sources in New York said it was actually another Israeli attempt to capture Palestinian guerrillas and that there were two "hijackers" who were actually Israeli secret agents. A Beirut airport source said the Israelis took four persons believed to be Palestinian guerrillas off the plane.

Israelis said the Boeing 707, owned by Lebanon, was hijacked over Cyprus on a flight from Libya to Lebanon. A flight of Israeli F-4 Phantom jets escorted the plane to the airport. Israeli troops had ringed the aircraft with armored personnel carriers, fire trucks and ambulances in case of emergency.

The hijacker, about 25 years old and dressed in a green suit, was led away from the red, white and blue Boeing 707 smiling broadly. His intentions remained a mystery. He had made no demands to Israeli authorities. No shots were fired during the rescue attempt, a military spokesman said, and no one was hurt.

There were unconfirmed reports he had requested political asylum.

In a related development, Israel warned the world today that despite condemnation from the United Nations Security Council, it will not let the rules of international law stand in the way of its hunt for Palestinian guerrilla leaders.

Gumboot Walkout Continues

VANCOUVER (CP) — Longshoremen remained off the job today despite an injunction instructing the longshoremen's union to order its members back to work.

Earlier in the day, Mr. Justice J. S. Atkins of the British Columbia Supreme Court issued the injunction against the union after a dispute over five pairs of gumboots shut down three-quarters of Vancouver's port activity Wednesday.

The dispute first arose in June when five longshoremen reported for work at the White Pass and Yukon dock to find they were to shovel salt, without having been given a protective-clothing notification.

This notification, which for salt means the wearing of gumboots, is supposed to be given in advance.

The five men refused to work, and White Pass demanded that they be punished. A mediator's ruling was interpreted differently by the two sides, and then the longshoremen's union claimed the five should be paid for the shift they didn't work.

The dispute blew up again Wednesday and shut down much of the waterfront when White Pass refused to accept any of the five when their names were put forward for work. Other longshoremen refused to work for White Pass, and the employers' association then stopped hiring altogether.

The sudden shutdown halted bulk exports of grain, coal, sulphur and potash.

Simple Truth Unshaken —Nixon

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon Wednesday night told the American people that two million words of Senate testimony have left unshaken the "simple truth" that he had no advance knowledge of the Watergate break-in and no part in its cover-up.

But he reiterated his refusal to turn over to Senate investigators or the Watergate prosecutors the tapes he says would exonerate him, arguing that any such disclosure would "cripple all future presidents" by exposing their private conversations to public scrutiny.

In a 30-minute radio-television address and an accompanying formal statement, the embattled chief executive acknowledged responsibility for "serious abuses" of both political ethics and national security procedures by some of his former White House and campaign aides.

But he said "the time has come to turn Watergate over to the courts," while he and the members of Congress "get on with the urgent business of our nation."

In a direct appeal to the voters — who last November gave him an historic election mandate but now tell pollsters they have lost confidence in his conduct in office — Nixon said:

"I ask for your help to insure that those who would exploit Watergate in order to keep us from doing what we were elected to do will not succeed."

Niether in the television talk, from his desk in the Oval Office of the White House, nor in the largely over-lapping formal statement that accompanied it did the president offer significant new details of his role in the Watergate case.

"The facts are complicated," he said, "and the evidence conflicting. It would not be right for me to try to sort out the evidence, to rebut specific witnesses, or to pronounce my own judgments about their credibility. That is for the committee and the courts."

Rather than attempting to rebut "the various charges in detail," Nixon underscored the contention of his previous major statements on April 30 and May 22 that "I had no prior knowledge of the Watergate operation; (and) I neither took part in nor knew about any of the subsequent cover-up activities. . . ."

With the latest Gallup Poll showing that approval of his presidency has dropped to 31 per cent and that almost three-fourths of his constituents believe he knew either of the break-in plans or of the cover-up, Nixon bore down hard on his own defence.

"In all the millions of words of testimony" to the Senate investigating committee, he said, "there is not the slightest suggestion that I had any knowledge of the planning for the Watergate break-in."

PAPER LACK HITS WEEKEND

MONTREAL (CP) — Weekend Magazine, a color supplement carried in the Victoria Times and 20 other Canadian Newspapers, will not publish its Sept. 1 edition because of a shortage of newsprint due to strikes, William Goodson, president of Montreal Standard Publishing Co., said Wednesday.

Both the magazine's newsprint suppliers Canadian International Paper (CIP) and Price Co. Ltd. — have been hit by strikes over new contracts.

Goodson said he did not know whether the magazine would be forced to cancel another issue in the future.

With the magazine's newsprint stockpile, the choice had to be made between cancelling either the Sept. 1 or the Sept. 8 edition, he said.

In Toronto, E. J. Mannion, president of Southstar Publishers Ltd., said Canadian Magazine, the weekend supplement carried by 14 newspapers also will not publish its Sept. 1 edition because of the newsprint problem.

Kingsview Move Stuns All Parties

NORTH COWICHAN — Action taken by North Cowichan council Wednesday stunned both a developer who plans a massive housing development for Mount Tzouhalem at Maple Bay and residents opposed to his plan.

In a surprise move before a council chamber filled with about 70 people, council unanimously passed two readings of amendments of a land-use contract between the municipality and Kingsview Properties Ltd.

The move was the latest in one of the biggest controversies faced by North Cowichan which began when council declared the 505 acres a development area in December, preparing the way for a land-use contract with Kingsview.

Four public hearings have been held, each attended by irate Maple Bay Road residents, opposed to the housing development which they say will overload services and ruin the rural atmosphere of the area.

The opposing residents had the original land-use contract quashed in court earlier this year.

Wednesday, council gave a first reading to a land-use contract discussed at the public hearings and followed by giving two readings to the amendments.

Neither the developer nor the opposition had had an opportunity to see the amendments until immediately before the meeting. Both sides seemed stunned at the move.

Interviewed after the meeting, Mayor Gerry Smith said the amendments gave council more rigid control over the development and would cost the developer more money.

"It's going to cost the developer a lot of money," he said, "it's up to him whether he accepts it or not."

Contacted today, Kingsview president George Wilkinson said it will be at least a week before a decision to go ahead can be made.

"We are going to have to look at the changes of the economics of the development," he said. "They're now allowing us only single-family dwellings — no townhouses or apartments. They've also tacked on another 10 acres of parks and playgrounds. That's a fairly hefty chunk of money. They've also reduced the commercial area and moved it back where the townhouses were to be."

There were hisses and
